FINANCE - LABOUR

WHITE-COLLAR militancy appears to be growing.

A strike ballot is being held among First National Bank employees — and one is looming at the Perm.

Both disputes relate to the annual pay talks.

The SA Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo) wants a 10% increase — FNB offers 13%.

The discussions affect 25,000 employees.

Sasbo general secretary Ben Smith says that in 1991 FNB produced a 16,8% tax increase in profit to R335.1-million.

FNB senior general manager Jimmy McKenzie says given the state of the economy it is important the bank protect itself for the future.

"The salary bill is R1-billion a year. Each 1% increase involves a large sum."

The outcome of the strike ballot will be known on February 4.

Mediation failed to resolve the dispute between the Perm and the Building Society Officials Association (Bosa).

Management offers a 10% raise, but the union wants 12%.

The Perm says in a handout to employees that a housing allowance — to those who did not previously benefit — is the equivalent of a 1.8% addition to the salary bill.

A union circular says the Perm has implemented its final offer to non-union members with effect from January 1.

The circular also says the Bosa received a "positive response" to an "opinion poll" about industrial action.
Estate agents’ diploma introduced in SA

AN internationally recognised diploma course for estate agents is being offered for the first time in SA.

The CRB Property Diploma course, sponsored by the Perm and endorsed by the National Property Academy and Institute of Estate Agents of SA, will start in February.

The course was designed in the US by real estate experts and covers all areas of SA real estate including residential, commercial and industrial business.

The course may be completed in two-, three- or four-year modules, and after completion participants will be awarded full membership of the faculty.

Dreanne Evers, senior faculty instructor of the US CRB Teaching Academy, will be teaching the course that runs in Johannesburg, Cape Town and Durban.

Evers, who holds an MBA, was co-author of the book on top residential property negotiators, Tips from the Top.

Financial institution staff pay levels decline

AVERAGE monthly pay levels at financial institutions declined in real terms during the third quarter of 1991. Salaries and wages of banking institution, building society and insurance company staff fell 1.5% when inflation was taken into account in the third quarter compared with the second quarter.

Central Statistical Service (CSS) figures show that after adjustments for inflation, salaries and wages in banking institutions were down 3.6% in the quarter ended September, and 4.3% in the year to September. When compared with second quarter figures, building society salaries and wages dropped 2.1%. Pay was also lower in insurance companies (1.8%). The number of full-time employees in banking institutions stood at 95,140 in the third quarter against 94,962 in the second quarter and 95,182 a year earlier.

General secretary of the SA Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo) Ben Smith said the decline in real monthly salaries was a reflection of average salary levels not keeping pace with inflation. The decline in salaries could also be influenced by fluctuations in the number of employees.

Sasbo was conducting a strike ballot on behalf of FNB employees following a breakdown in salary negotiations. A deadlock was declared in November when FNB offered employees a 15% pay rise against Sasbo demands for 16%.

The outcome of the strike ballot at 24 Sasbo branches around the country should be made known on February 4, and the union was confident that its FNB members would vote in favour of industrial action, Smith said.

FNB increased its profits in 1991 by 16.8% to R355,1m from R298,6m in 1990.

Absa to rationalise computer systems

ABSA's acquisition of Bankorp will lead to major rationalisation of the new group's computer systems.

Most sources say it is too early to speculate on exact changes, but it will probably no longer be necessary for the group to have two large backbone network systems, two computer and network management centres, backup centres, and other dual facilities.

Absa group executive of management services and technology Alwyn Burger says strategies will be formulated by Absa and Bankorp data and Absa mainframe technologies are predominantly IBM or IBM compatible, and we're using the same vendors, so there shouldn't be major program rewrites or other work necessary. Overall, our technology philosophies are much the same.

However, he says there will be savings in terms of not having to double up on certain services and products.

During its own restructuring, Absa did reduce staff, but Burger points out that at least two-thirds of the staff left through "natural" means — either because of normal "turnover" or by retiring.

"We don't expect major staff reductions now, because the workload will remain the same.

"Essentially, we must do our homework. IT staff are highly skilled, and not a resource to meddle with. Major costs would be incurred if we retrenched and were then forced to re-employ, so we'll avoid reductions as much as possible in the short term," he adds.

Another source in Bankorp points out that Absa has become a master of rationalisation due to its own restructurings over recent months, so the process should be well-handled.

He points out that Absa and Bankorp have already been co-operating on each other's disaster recovery systems.

"The big changes will come if it's decided to cut dual facilities such as networks, management infrastructures, mainframe sites and other computer-related systems," he adds.

Bankorp data has about 650 staff, but there are also several DP staff working in TrustBank, Senbank and Bankfin.
Horror crash 'scam':
Suspects still free

Two men accused of trying to make the deaths of their five victims appear as an accident, are still free.

According to survivors, the two men, Mr
Lucas Loubsir and Mr Isak "Kobus" Kruger, who have been suspended by Sanlam, first insured their eight victims for more than R1 million.

They then allegedly "caused" an accident near Witbank.

The minibus, into which the men had been loaded, plunged down a 30m ravine, killing five of the eight men.

Eastern Transvaal police spokesman Warrant Officer Andre van der Westhuizen confirmed that the police had not yet arrested the two men.

He said police had launched an intensive investigation into the case.

Sanlam yesterday confirmed it had suspended
Loubsir and Kruger.

It also offered to pay a total of R40 000 to the families of the eight crash victims: "as a gesture of goodwill and to assist in defraying the funeral and medical expenses involved".

The insurance company's Mr Emil Linde said it would be "grossly unfair and totally wrong to link Sanlam, as employer, to the alleged private activities of their employees".

The news of the suspension came as Mr
Jackson Mthembu of the ANC's Witbank office called on the insurance company to honour fully the insurance policies taken out on the lives of the dead men for the benefit of their families and compensate the others who were injured.

The suspension followed persistent newspaper reports on the allegations made by the survivors, Mr Lazarus Mmadi, Mr Samuel Motsimela and Mr Koot Skosana that the crash, on Sunday
July 19, was not an accident.

Mthembu has reacted strongly to the news that the two alleged murder suspects were still on the loose and added that the "only logical conclusion" to infer was that the suspects had not been arrested because they were white.

He said the initial charge of culpable homicide in an incident where five people were killed was itself a gross irregularity, viewed in the light of what happened in the past in the Westdene bus

TWO men, W. Kruger and Lucas Loubser, linked to the minibus death scam near Witbank have been suspended by Sanlam.

Five men died when the minibus plunged down a cliff and burst into flames. There were three survivors. The lives of the seven men had recently been insured and Kruger and Loubser were named as the beneficiaries. They stood to gain R1.5 million.

Survivors said Loubser had been driving the vehicle but was not in it when it crashed. Kruger was allegedly in another vehicle following the minibus.

Sanlam has denied any links with the alleged "private activities" of its employees. The company regretted the loss of life of the five young men and the injuries of the survivors and has contributed R40 000 to assist with funeral and medical costs.

According to the police, no action has been taken against the two Sanlam agents.
Technological advancement has its price, in the short term, at least.

Insurance company SA Eagle's decision to install an integrated computer network throughout its branches over the next 12 to 18 months will mean that about 20% of its workforce — 300 to 360 people — will be laid off over that period.

"While we are deeply sorry to have to take these steps," says MD Peter Martin, "the company has a responsibility to remain a productive, profitable organisation and it has an obligation to offer a secure, exciting future."

Certain insurers have installed computer systems that give them a slight competitive edge. This encouraged companies such as SA Eagle to appraise technology and implement long-term restructuring programmes.

To assist personnel no longer required, the company has provided a "very fair redundancy package."

Re-employment has been offered if the need for more staff arises but this seems to present few opportunities.

The new system will manage the issuing of policies, process, reinsurance, administer agents' ledgers, commission and general information together with claim payments and reinsurance recoveries. This will cut document handling, ledger entries and other labour-intensive tasks.

The short-term insurer says it will help the laid-off workers to handle tax and lodge claims with the UIF. It will also be flexible and tolerant over housing loans, give people time off to look for new jobs and provide counselling.

SA Eagle has held recognition talks with the Cosatu-affiliated Sacawu union but no agreement has been signed.
Last-minute talks to avoid bank strike action

SHARON SOROUR
Labour Reporter

LAST-minute negotiations have taken place to avert threatened industrial action by more than 18 500 First National Bank employees, which could close branches throughout the country.

The results of a strike ballot by members of the SA Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo) — the country’s oldest and biggest banking sector union — are expected to be announced today.

Yesterday union general secretary Mr Ben Smith was locked in last-minute negotiations with management, according to a union spokesman.

Earlier Mr Smith said he was confident workers would vote in favour of taking some form of industrial action.

The union accused the bank of “demotivating” its 25,000 employees by failing to keep a five-year-old “payment-on-performance” agreement and adopting a “market-related” policy for pay increases.

The members of the 38,000-strong union are demanding an increase of 16 percent on the salary bill, which is based on performance.

Management is offering an increase of 13 percent on the salary bill.

First National Bank senior general manager Mr Jimmy MacKenzie said that while he did not believe workers would vote to take industrial action, if there was “total support” for a strike, the bank would have no option but to close, review the situation and take necessary steps.

Mr Smith said bank employees felt “cheated”.

Last year was another record year with bank profits rising 16.8 percent from R329.8 million to R385.1 million, Mr Smith said.

Urgent talks to avert bank strike

LAST-MINUTE negotiations have taken place to avert a strike by more than 18 500 First National Bank employees, which could close branches throughout the country.

The results of a strike ballot by members of the SA Society of Bank Officials - the country's oldest and biggest banking-sector union - were due to be announced yesterday.

Union general secretary Mr Ben Smith was locked in last-minute negotiations with management yesterday, according to a union spokesman.

Earlier Smith said he was confident workers would vote in favour of taking some form of industrial action.

The union accused the bank of "demotivating" its 25 000 employees by failing to keep a five-year-old "payment-on-performance" agreement, and adopting a "market-related" policy for pay increases.

The members of the 38 000-strong union are demanding an increase of 16 percent based on performance.

The management is offering 13 percent.

First National Bank senior general manager Mr Jimmy Mackenzie said although he did not believe workers would vote to take industrial action, if there was "total support" for a strike, the bank would have no option but to close, review the situation and take necessary steps.

Smith said employees felt "cheated".

"The bank vowed not to move the goal posts if their staff achieved outstanding results. Our members accepted the challenge and have produced record profits for four consecutive years," Smith said.

Last year was another record year with bank profits rising 16.8 percent from R329.8 million to R385.1 million, Smith said.
Salary dispute at FNB has ended

The two-month dispute between the First National Bank and its employees over salary increase has ended, according to the bank's general manager of personnel affairs, Mr Colin Hunt.

The workers and First National Bank reached a deadlock in November last year when it refused to meet their demand of a 16 percent across-the-board increase, offering them a 12 percent increase instead. Hunt yesterday said the offer had now been overwhelmingly accepted.

"The offer provides for minimum increases ranging from 12 percent upwards and is based on individual performance.\)
FNB strike averted

Strike action involving First National Bank’s 25,000 employees has been averted following the failure of the SA Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo) to secure sufficient support for industrial action in a strike ballot.

The ballot had been held following a deadlock in pay talks between Sasbo and FNB. The bank said in a statement yesterday that there had been “overwhelming support” among employees to accept its wage offer, made in December, of minimum wage increases ranging from 12 percent upwards, based on merit. Effective from January 1, the increases would push up the bank’s wage bill by 13 percent.

A Sasbo spokesman confirmed that the union had accepted the offer.

Sasbo this week began wage talks with the Standard Bank, affecting nearly 20,000 employees.

Labour Reporter 61

COUNTRYWIDE industrial action at First National Bank was averted when a strike ballot by thousands of employees failed to achieve the majority of votes.

More than 18 500 members of the S.A. Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo) accepted management's offer of increases from 12 to 20 percent, based on performance.

This would mean a minimum cost increase to the bank of 13 percent and was effective from January 1, the bank said in a statement.

The ballot results were announced yesterday.
SA estate agents to join world body

ESTATE agents in SA have been invited to join an international federation representing their profession.

The International Real Estate Federation (FIABCI) decided at a recent meeting of its board in Sao Paulo, Brazil, to invite an application by the Institute of Estate Agents of SA (IEASA) for "principal membership" of the international body.

FIABCI deputy world president-elect David Blumberg said approval of the application by a board meeting during the federation's world congress in Montreux, Switzerland, in May would be a formality.

Blumberg is a former South African living in Israel and has worked for many years to get SA's membership accepted.

"This is a tremendous opportunity for South Africans who are now, after years of sanctions, coming back into the international community," he says.

"There is a great deal of business to be done out there, and FIABCI provides access to it through its sub-committees, conventions and membership list."

Trevor Downing, president of the IEASA, says FIABCI is a federation of professional real estate associations, represented in 48 countries. In addition to access to international business, the federation provides real estate agents with an effective means of communication to enable them to share their knowledge and experience.

Downing says the IEASA will now be responsible for the formation of an SA chapter of FIABCI and its administration.

Other associations in the building industry or individuals wishing to join the organisation would, in the case of estate agents, have to be members of the IEASA, or, in the case of other professions, members of their professional association.

"We are proud to be associated with an organisation which has as its members many of the foremost property and related companies in the world, representing the widest range of disciplines — from construction, engineering and development companies to architects, valuers, town planners, lawyers and brokers."

FIABCI president David Blumberg and Trevor Downing will attend the IEASA annual convention at Sun City in August.

Hood has also expressed interest in meeting cabinet ministers and others involved in the housing industry.
Investing in the future

THE Future Bank has struck a note for gender equality in the workplace with the appointment of marketing manager Lindiwe Kubeka.

She sees nothing unusual with the bank appointing a female in this important area of operation.

"I'm bringing expertise and knowledge to the job. What drives me essentially is that I want to make the bank a success."

In fact, gender equality is one of the ethics the Future Bank is building into its employee relations.

Operations and marketing general manager Phillip van den Heever says: "People must be treated the same."

Kubeka, a mother of three, grew up in Pin- ville, Soweto.

After school she cut her teeth in marketing, working for a number of companies. Her last position was working as a marketing analyst for a well-known company manufacturing multi-purpose plastic kitchenware.

You think you are not being diplomatic when you ask her age and she shoots an answer: "I'm 33 years old. I'm not scared of my age. Maybe when I hit 40 I'll start getting scared."

Who says a woman never tells her age?"

Criminal Act used to question FNB workers

CAPE TOWN — Three First National Bank (FNB) employees were subjected to an inquiry in terms of Section 205 of the Criminal Procedure Act in the Cape Town Magistrate's Court yesterday for refusing to provide the police with confidential information regarding the Gilbeys account.

The employees said it was the policy of the bank not to give confidential information about clients unless subpoenaed.

The questioning by Adv Petrus Marais of the Office for Serious Economic Offences related to the police investigation of charges of fraud and corruption against former Gilbeys bookkeeper Margaret Harding.

Harding was indicted on Friday in the Cape Town Magistrate's Court to appear in the Cape Supreme Court on April 27 on charges of fraud and corruption.

She was alleged to have invested Gilbeys money on a fixed deposit basis with provisionally liquidated broking house, Fundtrust, without Gilbeys' authority and to have received commissions totalling R2.4m from Fundtrust to do so.

Gilbeys had R4.6m invested with Fundtrust when it was provisionally wound up.

FNB manager's assistant in the Cape Town corporate branch Derek Myngaard said that Gilbeys borrowed money on a call basis from FNB up to a rearranged limit which was negotiated at a high level. Harding did the draw downs and Myngaard said he assumed she was working within the scope of Gilbeys' authorisation.

FNB cables department Martina Reinink clerk said she received the instructions from Harding to undertake the transfer of Gilbeys funds. One instruction from Harding had only one of the required two authorised signatures and another had no signatures at all. Harding had explained this and the transfers went ahead.

The indictment against Harding said that from August 1990 Fundtrust director Asil Kamfer began to reward Harding with cash amounts of R1 000 for maintaining the relationship between Gilbeys and Fundtrust. Up to January 1991, she accepted seven such payments.

In early 1991 Kamfer allegedly said to Harding that she would get a commission of 1% of funds placed with Fundtrust on a fixed deposit basis. Harding allegedly borrowed money on Gilbeys account on call from the money market to onlead on a fixed basis to Fundtrust.

Criteria

In her daily statements Harding allegedly omitted to mention all funds she had borrowed on a call basis for the purpose of fixing the funds with Fundtrust.

Meanwhile, in a recent circular to creditors, Fundtrust liquidators said the company's assets totalled R47m, including loans to clients of R16m, the vast majority of which "were not made on the normal lending criteria".

"Our attorneys have already been instructed to institute legal proceedings against many clients."

The provisional liquidators were reasonably certain that investors would not receive less than 35c in the rand. They were confident that a first dividend of 10c in the rand would be paid during July.
4 000 jobs to go in bank cuts

CLAIRE GEBHARDT
Weekend Argus Correspondent

AMALGAMATED Banks of South Africa (Absa) is on the brink of axing at least 4 000 workers.

Market speculation is that the figure could be as high as 6 000 by mid-year.

The company is expected to formally announce its plans next week.

'A source within Absa said the company would make the retrenchments as humane as possible and would consider every alternative.'

The cost-cutting exercise will affect the group's administration and computer staff, branch networks and head offices.

The merger between Volkskas, United, Allied and Sage, which created the Absa banking behemoth in January last year, quickly emerged as the largest, most hotly contested and confusing takeover bid in South Africa's history.

CE Piet Badenhorst stressed then that there would be no short-term slashing of staff or services. He said natural attrition would cut numbers. Talk was of rationalisation of facilities rather than staff.

But the economic downturn altered the scenario drastically.

Analysts see the SA banking sector as generally over-serviced, under-capitalised and under-profitable.

The most serious dimension of overbanking is over-staffing and in June last year Absa announced that staff numbers would be reduced and computer centres pruned.

In January this year, Absa's mighty swallow of Bankorp in a R1.5 billion share swap took its assets base from R53 billion to more than R80 billion and set the scene for further staff reductions, branch closures and systems trimming.

Staff morale is said to be at an all-time low this week as staff axings are discussed.

One employee said it was widely rumoured that staff, said to number 44 000, would ultimately be reduced by 35 percent.

Three trade unions will fight for members' rights — the United Staff Association, the Financial Workers' Union (FIWA) and the Absa Workers' Union.

The United Staff Association general secretary, Mr Frans Schimper, said it had negotiated very good retrenchment packages.

"In most cases there is a two months' notice period and another six months' severance pay, so we're looking at eight months at full pay."

"Employees will also get compensation for loss of housing benefits and company car, and will receive full pension benefits — theirs plus Absa's."

Market sources say the retrenchment blows are likely to rain heaviest on Alled staff.

Of concern, though, is that Bankfin and Trustbank workers are not yet unionised and trade unions believe it may be too late to negotiate packages for these people. "It depends on how fast Absa moves."
Bankorp lay-offs 4/12

Bankorp is to retrench employees as a result of its incorporation in Absa.

Absa says it is an extension of the rationalisation process that began in April last year.

Absa group executive for human resources Petrus Classen says all alternatives to retrenchment will be considered before a final decision is taken. They include normal labour turnover, transfers, restrictions on recruitment, reductions in overtime, retraining, and the use of more temporary employees.
Layoff figures denied by Absa

ABSA management had not put a figure on the number of employees who would be retrenched from the group during the next year, but reports of a 35% reduction in the staff complement were totally unfounded, group communications manager Jan Snyman said yesterday.

A Sunday newspaper reported that Absa was slashing its staff by 4 000 workers, a figure which could rise to 6 000 by mid-year, and its 44 000 staff would ultimately be reduced by 35%.

Snyman said the rationalisation process, which began when Allied, United and Volkskas merged to form Absa last year, would continue during the next financial year but retrenchments would not be nearly as high as reported. He also strongly denied the statement that retrenchments would be heaviest in Allied Bank.

The staff complement at Absa was 44 000; 26 000 from Absa and 18 000 from Bankorp. Bankorp had undergone a rationalisation process prior to its merger with Absa, he said.

A statement issued by the group at the weekend said Absa was conscious of the adverse economic climate facing the country.

Human resources director Petrus Claassen said all practical alternatives to the retrenchments would be pursued, including natural labour turnover, transfers to other areas in the group, restrictions on recruitment, overtime reductions, employee retraining and early retirement.
Job losses gain for union

WHITE collar workers in the financial services industry, exposed to mass retrenchments for the first time, were only now becoming aware of their rights and the benefits of union membership, said Financial Institutions Workers Union (Fiwu) general secretary Dallis Hall.

He was responding to recent retrenchments at Absa and Perm.

Neither the 11 500-strong union nor Absa would be drawn on details of retrenchment packages. Both said packages were often individually tailored.

The minimum standard package includes three months’ salary, including notice pay, and the right to retain all car, pension, medical and housing benefits during this period.

In addition, some companies pay two weeks’ salary for every year of service, up to a maximum seven months’ pay.

Other benefits would also be retained in this period.

Pension payouts usually include the employer’s contribution plus interest.

Employees in financial institutions usually have subsidised housing loans or special low interest loans between 2.5% and 7.5%. These reverts to the commercial rate once the terms of the retrenchment package expire.

Although there have been retrenchments — neither the union nor Absa would say how many — jobs are also being cut through natural attrition and early retirement packages.

Companies tend to evaluate performance levels when retrenching, and apply last in, first out criteria.

The union said the biggest problem with retrenchment was employee trauma.

“Fiwu is concerned about the manner in which line managers are handling employees in this emotional exercise,” Hall said.

The union has requested employee assistance and counseling by outside agencies.

Employers should try to avoid retrenchment at all cost. “The economic climate has pressurised employers to reduce costs through retrenchments, but employers have a social responsibility,” Hall said.
Saccawu demands a joint employers’ forum in June

THE SA Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers’ Union (Saccawu) has threatened to occupy major stores, hotels and banks if all the major service sector employers do not come to a joint meeting in June to discuss the 96 000-member union’s demands.

Saccawu will also then demand the nationalisation of the service industry.

This emerged from Saccawu’s national bargaining conference held at the weekend.

The union said it would present all retail, catering and financial services employers with demands for a national industry forum, a national provident fund and training board.

Saccawu also rejected job flexibility, employing casual workers and subcontracting, and demanded a moratorium on retrenchments. It would oppose any wage freeze and fight for a living wage.

If employers did not meet these demands in June, Saccawu would declare disputes, apply for conciliation boards and conduct strike ballots.

The strike ballot would be for national strike action, including occupation of stores, hotels or banks.

When Saccawu last called all employers to a joint meeting in March to discuss a national provident fund — the only major employers to turn up were Metro and Karos Hotels.

According to Saccawu, Pick ‘n Pay and Metro have already indicated they would attend.

If current offers on the table in the retail and catering sector are anything to go by, the union seems headed for a major showdown with employers.

Checkers, which is losing several million rands each month, has proposed a 10% wage cut, and provided the union with a long list of stores it wants to close altogether.

And Southern Sun and OK Bazaars are offering 7% and 5% respectively, both to be implemented later than usual due to depressed conditions.

In retail, where minimum wages range from R500 to R1250 a month, there are large disparities between groups.

Pick ‘n Pay, for example, has offered a 13% increase and it, along with Edgars and Woolworths, is among the sector’s top performers.

Retail employers are reluctant to join a national forum for the service industry because of the scope of industry. Saccawu has organised everything from supermarkets to hairdressers.

In the financial sector, where Saccawu’s membership is minute, the 22 000-strong SA Society of Bank Officials recently had to abandon a strike at First National Bank after its members voted against it.

And the Perm and Absa are retrenching staff.
Absa heads still rolling

By ZILLA EFRA

MORE than 1.350 employees have been axed since the formation of Absa last year. At least another 292 jobs, including those at Bankorp, are due to go.

So says Absa group executive, human resources, Petrus Claassen, who dismisses reports that about 4,000 jobs will be lost by March next year.

Dr Claassen declines to say how many people will lose their jobs because it will take until June to decide on the number.

He says retrenchments are being made to eliminate inefficiencies and duplication as Absa companies, including the recently acquired Bankorp group, are brought together.

The movement of people around the group, aimed at better space use, will also have implications on the property side.

Absa general manager, property, Hannes van der Merwe confirms that some of the group’s leases are likely to be ended as employees move to the group’s buildings. In the longer term, some Absa buildings could be sold.

Societies

Reports of numerous retrenchments at Bankorp subsidiaries, Senbank and Trustbank continued to filter through this week.

Staff members say the retrenchments started at the upper levels and have started moving downwards.

Dr Claassen says the average retrenchment package is for four months’ pay. The group’s replacement centre is trying to find positions for those who have been retrenched. This, however, will become more difficult if retrenchment numbers grow.

South African Society of Bank Officials (Suabo) general secretary Ben Smith says members believe that business decisions are being taken with scant concern for the human cost.

Mr Smith says the situation stems from a “notoriously autocratic” approach to industrial relations that has characterised companies that make up the Absa group.

The former building societies that now have leading roles in Absa were notoriously anti-union, he says.

Officials of other unions representing bank workers could not be reached for comment.
Bank aims to train its own management

Although it is a black-owned bank, all the top positions at Future Bank are held by whites.

Managing director Neville Watchurst explains: "There are a number of reasons, and most important is the fact that there is little banking experience in the black community.

"Few black people have managed to achieve senior status in conventional banks."

A management agreement exists between Future Bank and First National whereby the bank will be managed for a period of 12 years.

Of the bank's 87 employees, the top 16 have been seconded from First National subsidiary Wesbank.

"We have two objectives: to find the right people and train them to be skilled bankers who will be able to take over the top management positions, including mine."

"One of these days we will not only have a black-owned but a black-managed bank as well," Mr Watchurst says.

The bank's other 41 employees in Johannesburg, Pretoria and Bloemfontein are mostly black.

"They were recruited from all walks of life. Some had banking experience, but most had zero banking experience."

"We did not restrict ourselves to people with formal banking experience. Instead we chose people we thought had the potential and could be trained."

"It is difficult to find the kind of person we are looking for because it will take a certain kind of person to succeed here."

"The big banks have large client bases and established procedures. The environment in the big banks is very comfortable and the people will behave accordingly."

"We need exciting people who will go out and market our products."

Nobody at the bank will be talking about equal opportunities. Mr Watchurst says: "To me it is an old, somewhat trite phrase."

"It also smacks of tokenism. If it is fashionable to have a lady, you go and get one, and the same if it is fashionable to have a black person."

"What we are saying is that, no matter whether you are black, white, male or female, the opportunities for advancement will be exactly the same."

"We are a brand new company and everyone has started at the same time. It is up to the staff to prove themselves."

New agency clinches account

Seven advertising agencies were allowed to pitch for the Future Bank account, and it was newly established all-black agency Herdhuys' approach that impressed the most.

"We did not just choose them because they were black. They truly understood the bank's mission more clearly than the other competitors," general manager, marketing, Phillip van der Heever says.

The modest advertising budget will restrict to some extent the ability to go over the top in terms of TV advertising.

The strategy is to concentrate on Radio and print. Slots have already been booked on Radio Metro, Bop and 702 and the intention is to attract the "influentials" in the hope that word-of-mouth will cascade down to the broader public.

Herdhuys MD Peter Vundla believes his company clinched the account because of the creative work they gave the bank.

"In addition to our strategic positioning of the bank came from a deep and clear understanding of the bank's main markets."

"We understood the frustrations black people encounter at the major banks and our research backed our views, hence the decision on the slogan: 'The bank with a new attitude.'"
Absa will finalise staffing needs by June

By Roy Colman

Absa (Amalgamated Banks of South Africa) has retrenched 1300 employees since the giant financial institution was formed but attrital retrenchment figure has not yet been determined.

Dr. Petrus Claassen, Absa group executive (human resources) admitted the group—formed from the merger last year of the United, Allied, Volkskas and Sage Financial Services—with another merger this year, was too heavy.

He described newspaper reports of 4000 employees ultimately being retrenched as "pure speculation".

He said the rationalisation programme was not focused only on TrustBank but on all divisions within the group.

It was not focused on senior employees alone, but was being conducted from the top down, with senior managers the first to be retrenched.

A study of all the divisions, function by function, was being conducted to determine staff requirements.

Because three individual groups had been brought together, it could be expected that Absa would be top heavy and that there would be duplication.

Absa's middle management was "a little over developed" and it would also be thinned out.

The main part of the study of the group's staff requirements would be completed by the end of June and the rationalisation would be completed within the following six to 12 months.

Absa's staffing policy, cleared by all the unions involved. Where possible, employees were put on early retirement.

On hearing of the retrenchment, employees were allowed to go home. This saved them any embarrassment in facing their colleagues, and protected the morale of the rest of the group.

Dr. Claassen said of the 1300 people removed since the formation of Absa, only one retrenchment case had gone to the Industrial Court.
Healthy office environments crucial to costs and productivity
Many at Nedcor face axing

SIGNIFICANT structural changes within the Nedcor Group could see more than 100 employees facing the axe, industry sources said yesterday.

One source at the bank said the figure could be as high as 400.

Nedcor CE Chris Liebenberg said last night the 400 figure was “totally inaccurate”, but would not commit himself to a number.

However, he said it was inevitable that certain positions would be lost in any restructuring but, in line with the group’s policy, “superior performing staff” would be reallocated within the wider group.

Liebenberg said the Nedcor group, which employed about 18 000 people, had over the past few years reduced staff through natural attrition.

At Nedcor subsidiary Finansbank 35 jobs are on the line. Internal services senior GM Tony Laubscher said attempts were being made to place the 35 in other divisions, but staff who lost their jobs would get a minimum of three months pay.

In the Nedcor Bank human resources division, 70 staff members out of a total of 340 may face the axe. Human resources executive GM Philip Bacchioni said there were no plans to retrench staff, and attempts were being made to place staff in the group.

Nedcor Bank divisional director Mike Leeming said fewer people were needed in the human resources department following the Perm-Nedbank link-up.

Liebenberg said it was a worldwide phenomenon that banks were trimming operations. SA banks had to keep up with global trends to remain competitive.

Meanwhile, an Absa spokesman said the banking group’s rationalisation was progressing according to plan. The group’s objective was to give people certainty regarding their positions as soon as possible.

Meredith Jensen reports that the recent incorporation of Bankorp into Absa has prompted many former Bankorp employees to join the Financial Institutions Workers’ Union (FIWU).

The union said yesterday since April 1 nearly 600 workers who feared they might be among the 4 000 Absa/Bankorp employees scheduled for retrenchment this year have become union members.
Banking shake-up as job-cutting starts

Business Staff

BANK group Absa is concerned at the way its rationalisation programme is being implemented by some line managers and at the despondency of staff as widespread job-cutting gets under way.

Starting this week, head office personnel officials will visit group offices countrywide, telling staff and managers about the programme and listening to their woes.

Complaints are not inconsiderable — and group executives concede some are not without justification.

Absa (Amalgamated Banks of SA), originally an amalgam of United, Volkskas, Sage Financial Services and Allied, became far and away South Africa's biggest agglomeration of banks early this year in a R1 billion-plus share swap to acquire ailing Bankorp — which comprises TrustBank, Senbank and Bankfin.

Its assets topped R180 billion and staff numbers 45 000.

It is an open secret that South Africa is "over-banked" and Absa bosses conceded numbers would have to come down. Attrition was ruled out as the economy continued to decline and margins came under increased pressure.

A big restructuring programme began and surplus numbers came up for the chop. But officials were coy when figures were mentioned.

Even as reports speculating 4 000 would go were being roundly denied, a number of 6 000 was bandied about, with estimates putting the final workforce at little more than half its original level.

Explaining the recent placing of 44 Durban staff members of the Bankfin motor finance division on the "surplus list" — Absa's method of retrenching — group personnel executive Neels Steenkamp said banks worldwide were overstaffed.

Some 20 000 were to be axed following the recent merger of Lloyd's and Midland banks in Britain, he said, while closer to home, Nedcor admitted this week it was trimming numbers.

"About 65 percent of the cost structure of a bank is people. With the economy declining and margins squeezed, something had to give," said Mr Steenkamp.

All South African banks had been cutting overheads through attrition for some time. Absa's were necessary for the continued survival of its constituent parts, he maintained, and had attracted attention only because they were by retrenchment.

"Because of the poor economic climate and the lack of vacancies anywhere, staff turnover is abnormally low and we cannot wait for time to take care of excess numbers.

"Obviously, because of the uncertainty and the harm retrenchments cause to morale, we want to move as quickly as possible," said Mr Steenkamp.

Nedcor Bank has embarked on an "integrated growth strategy" to improve efficiency and reduce costs, promising retrenchments would only be used as a last resort.

Nedcor CEO Richard Laubscher said in Johannesburg yesterday the group's new organisational structure was based on an analysis of the market serviced by financial institutions.

"We then segmented it (the market) very carefully and set out to align our businesses to match those segmentations," he said.

The restructuring process was almost complete and all duplication would be eliminated, Mr Laubscher said.

Elaborating on the details of the restructuring, he said marketing, human resources, processing and credit functions had been integrated across Nedbank and the Perm.
Recovery plan calls for 400 job cuts

Nedcor plans 400 jobs in rationalisation

The NEDCOR bank has reduced its workforce by 400 employees, which it is hoping to reallocate to the bank's business units.

The move comes as the bank's profits have declined, and it is looking to cut costs in order to improve its financial performance.

The bank's CEO, Martin Lebowa, said: "We have taken steps to address the challenges facing the bank, and we are confident that our rationalisation plan will help us achieve our strategic objectives.

"We are committed to ensuring that our customers are well served, and we believe that by reducing our workforce, we can focus on providing excellent service and delivering value to our clients."
Nedcor Bank's staff reduced by 400

NEDCOR Bank had reduced its staff complement by about 400 during its restructur-ing to date — mainly through natural attri-tion, MD Richard Laubscher said yesterday. Further cuts would only be intro-duced as a last resort, he added.

Speaking at a news conference, Laubscher said natural attrition would handle the shrinkage in staff numbers.

"But obviously low productivity workers will have to go," he said.

There was no final staff target number and the bank was prepared to increase staff in areas where there was a return.

Restructuring had involved a name change from Nedperm to Nedcor Bank and a separation of banking interests into indi-vidual business units. (51)

Nedcor Bank's business units would consist of Nedbank's corporate, international, commercial and personal banking divi-sions, Nedfin Bank and the Perm.

Laubscher said the group would concent-rate on niche markets through attitudinal, rather than income, segmentation.

Nedcor was trimming the infrastruc-tural side of the Perm and would in future cater for risk-averse clients who wanted off-the-shelf products, safety and security.

There were no plans to reduce any part of the Perm's advances book and hopefully the Perm book would grow, he said.
Sturdy earnings from Absa — but 849 jobs axed

From SHARON WOOD

Johannesburg: In its first full financial year, banking conglomerate Absa showed a 13.2% rise in earnings but announced it had retrenched 849 staff members since April 1.

The group managed to exceed its projected savings target of R85m, with net savings of R86m during 1992 but had debt provisions leap from R175,4m.

MD Piet Badenhorst said manpower-cost savings had been enormous adding staff numbers would be reduced "meaningfully" from the last financial year's 4,271, which included Bankorp staff.

Staff rationalisation would be completed in six months and technology rationalisation within 15 months, he said.

Earnings rose in line with market expectations to 107.6c a share during 1992 from 89.4c previously. The total dividend rose 9.7% to 39.5c a share from 36c.

Badenhorst said the group was aware that it would lose market share to its competitors during the rationalisation process. "But we want to reduce our exposure to the corporate market in areas where we have been overexposed," he said.

Attributable income jumped by 15.9% to R491m but this was not strictly comparable as it included only the preceding six months' results of Allied and Volkskas and three months of Sage interests.

Total ABSA assets increased by 8.5% to R36.2bn from R33.8bn. Advances rose by 10.5% to R42.1bn from R38.2bn. With Bankorp included from March 31, group assets are R34.4bn and advances are R64.7bn.

Return on average assets fell to 0.69% during 1992 from 1.61%.

"This is not the kind of return we are striving for, we want it to be over one percent," Badenhorst said. ABSA chairman Here Hefner expected no significant recovery from the recession. "Demand for credit is likely to remain sluggish and the high level of default amongst borrowers will continue," he said.

Meanwhile, Standard Bank has extended its international links by acquiring British merchant bank Brown Shipley Holdings for £10m (R201.4m), it announced yesterday.

Brown Shipley operates on Jersey and the Isle of Man, two major international financial service centres, and has high volumes of funds under administration and representation from most leading global banking and investment institutions, a Standard Bank statement says.

The deal is subject to the agreement of UK authorities.

The acquisition will allow Standard Bank involvement in all areas of offshore asset management including banking and global custody, fiduciary services, investment management and stockbroking.

The deal will have negligible effects on profit and net assets in the short term, but major long-term benefits are expected.

All of SA's big four banks have interests in the UK but Standard and FNB are still waiting to receive banking licences from the Bank of England.

Nedcor Bank and Absa received banking licences prior to the deal's standstill and operate fully functioning branches in London.
Absa staff cuts aid earnings growth

SHARON WOOD

IN ITS first full financial year, banking conglomerate Absa showed a 15.2% rise in earnings but announced it had retrenched 849 staff members since April 1.

The group managed to exceed its projected savings target of R86m, with net savings of R98m during 1992.

But bad debt provisions leapt 157% to R450.8m from R175.4m.

MD Piet Badenhorst said manpower cost savings had been enormous, adding that staff would be reduced "meaningfully" from the last financial year’s 42,714, which included Bankorp staff.

Staff rationalisation would be completed in six months and technology rationalisation within 15 months, he said.

Earnings rose in line with market expectations to 107.5c a share during 1992 from 93.1c previously. The total dividend rose 9.7% to 39.5c a share from 36c.

Badenhorst said the group was aware that it would lose market share to its competitors during the rationalisation process.

"But we want to reduce our exposure to the corporate market in areas where we have been overexposed," he said.

Attributable income jumped 153% to R401m, but this was not strictly comparable as it included only the preceding six months’ results of Allied and Volkskas, and three months of Sage interests.

Total Absa assets increased 8.5% to R56.2bn from R51.8bn. Advances rose by 10.5% to R42.1bn from R38.2bn. With Bankorp included from March 31, group assets were R84.4bn and advances R64.7bn.

Return on average assets fell to 0.95% during 1992 from 1.01%. "This is not the kind of return we are striving for, we want it to be over one percent," Badenhorst said.

Absa chairman Herc Hefer expected no significant recovery from the recession.

"Demand for credit is likely to remain sluggish and the high level of default amongst borrowers will continue," he said.
NEDCOR Bank believes 10% of its staff members are underperforming, and the banking group plans to whittle this figure down to zero by September 30.

Confidential documents show the company believes 20% of employees are "highly exceptional top performers" and that NEDCOR "will only have superior staff members in our employ by September 29 1999."

According to the documents, NEDCOR has embarked on a programme to identify workers who, it believes, are not up to standard. It will then attempt to retrain them.

Executive GM, human resources NEDCOR Bank, Philip Bacchioni said these workers — about 500 — would not necessarily be retrenched. They would first be given the opportunity to improve themselves through a personal improvement programme (PIP) and could be offered a job at a lower grade.

As a last resort, they would be retrenched. However, 95% of staff put on PIP came up to standard. Overall, the NEDCOR group had cut its staff complement by 400 since October 1, mostly through attrition. He said 35 workers were laid off. The cost of the programme would be minimal.

Staff turnover in the NEDCOR group was about 10% of the total 17 000, so numbers could be cut by not replacing staff. "We will make sure we look after performing employees," Bacchioni said.
Saambou Bank retrenches 300

SAAMBÔU Bank has retrenched 300 people after restructuring its head office and branch office network.

Group MD Johan Myburgh said in a statement yesterday the approximately 300 people involved were individually consulted. Personnel affected by the restructuring had received the necessary aid, guidance and severance compensation.

“Certain areas where significant target market shifts have taken place recently have necessitated the restructuring process,” he said.

The restructuring had been completed and the final touches were now being given to the new branch network and streamlined structure. The new structure would be fully operational on July 1.

“The restructuring of Saambou Bank’s structures was necessary to improve its competitiveness in the market, as well as to further extend its aim to be a low-cost supplier of banking services to the salary earner and pensioner.”

Several senior Absa dealers have also been left without jobs after rationalisation of the bank’s three dealing rooms.

An Absa spokesman confirmed that there had been a “surplus” of dealing room staff as a result of the rationalisation process, but would not give the number of dealers retrenched.

An Eskom spokesman had received offers from applicants but could give no further details. When asked whether any of the applicants had been given jobs at Eskom, he said: “No, there is no space, which is unfortunate because there are some good people.”

A Standard Bank spokesman said the bank’s dealing room staff turnover was virtually zero. This was because the bank usually did not employ outside people. FNB senior dealer Ken Russell said he had seen a number of CVs from retrenched Absa staff, but not as many as were expected.
Plan to train black bankers in New York

A GROUP of US banks has agreed to sponsor a six-month financial and banking management development programme in New York for six promising black employees of SA banks.

Joyce Brown, of New York City University, who will administer the project, said its purpose was to enhance the professional capabilities of black South Africans who had the capacity to play significant leadership roles in their companies.

Brown said the sponsors — Chase Manhattan, the Chemical Bank, JP Morgan and Co, the First Boston Corp and Citibank — had been approached by New York mayor David Dinkins to make an investment in the people of SA.

Southern Life employee benefits and marketing regional manager Richard Molowa, one of six candidates selected for the project, said he had positive expectations as the scheme meant exposure to a different world.

He said the programme was run on a mentor system with each candidate employed in an area of expertise of his own choice. FNB Parktown; branch manager Harvey Khuzwayo said the project was a “lifetime opportunity”. He said he would concentrate on corporate banking, credit and risk management.

“Although the programme will keep me away from my wife and two children for six months, it is worthwhile.”

Both Khuzwayo and Molowa rejected the idea that the project was tokenism on the part of US banks.

The other candidates are from Standard Bank, the Perm, Premier Foods and Nedcor.

Secessional Ideals in Action

The age of mass production is giving way to the age of mass consumption. In the 1980s, under the leadership of President Thabo Mbeki, South Africa embarked on a programme of economic transformation. This was aimed at reducing the wealth gap between the country's white minority and black majority. The programme, known as the New Growth路径, sought to promote economic growth and development, particularly among the black majority.

The programme was based on a number of principles, including:

- The promotion of a dynamic, diversified and export-oriented economy
- The elimination of poverty and inequality
- The promotion of gender equality
- The protection of the environment

The programme was supported by a range of policies, including:

- The introduction of a new constitution
- The establishment of a national health insurance scheme
- The creation of a new economic framework
- The promotion of education and training

The New Growth path was a significant achievement, but it also faced a number of challenges. These included:

- The slow pace of economic growth
- The high levels of unemployment
- The slow pace of transformation

Despite these challenges, the New Growth path has been successful in reducing poverty and inequality in South Africa. It has also helped to promote economic growth and development, particularly among the black majority.

The New Growth path is a clear example of how South Africa has been able to transform its economy in the face of significant challenges. It is a testament to the country's resilience and determination to create a more just and prosperous society.
Property education a major contribution

ONE of Sapoa's major contributions to the property industry is its advancement of property education.

It has continually sourced the market for its needs and adapted and expanded its courses to cater for this. Five courses are offered at present, says executive director Brian Kirchmann.

"The best known of the courses is the property development programme, which is now in its 17th year. "It has released more than 1 000 participants into the industry," he says.

The programme is a joint venture between the University of Cape Town Graduate School of Business and Sapoa, and is held in Cape Town over two weeks in July and August of each year.

It caters for 64 participants and covers the principles of finance, valuation and property law, negotiations, marketing and management.

Draws

Designed for executive management, the "live-in" course draws participants from all disciplines of the property industry.

The next bi-annual property executive programme will be run in September.

The course caters for about 40 participants, drawn mainly from senior executive positions.

Matters like the local political and economic climate and the international scenario are examined.

The course is designed to encourage group participation, Kirchmann says.

As a result of investigations by the industry among school leavers and the public, a three-year property course has been devised.

Starting in January 1996 and administered by Technikon RSA, the course intends to promote vocational training.

"This is the first time that a local Technikon is presenting formal tertiary education in real estate, and we hope that the course will eventually be developed so it can be presented by any university," he says.

A new basic property programme will be launched in October.

It will be an introduction to property, covering elementary economics, law, marketing, finance and a basic understanding of the industry.

The property introductory programme was run for the second time last month. It is designed to improve participants' basic knowledge of the many aspects of the industry.

Shopping centre management and development courses, planned for August this year, will be handled by Chris Cloete from the University of Pretoria. Each course will be limited to 25 participants, will be three days in duration and an examination will be written at the end.

The shopping management centre course participants will have to carry out a spot analysis of a shopping centre.

Background research on the viability of development on a possible site will also be required.

It is planned that both courses will have to be passed before acceptance is granted for a proposed two-year course.

"One of our aims is to continue to identify the educational needs of both the industry and the general public and to find ways of catering for these.

"Our courses have been innovative, and we intend to go from strength to strength in this sphere," Kirchmann says.

Bara strikers dig in their heels

THE NATIONAL Education and Health Workers Union yesterday vowed to defy a court interdict and continue with their strike and picketing over wage grievances at Baragwanath Hospital.

A Nehawu spokesman yesterday said the union members from 10 other clinics in Soweto were expected to join the strike.

A Sowetan team which visited the hospital yesterday found workers at the kitchen preparing food.

The workers, as well as those in the theatres and mortuary, are exempted from the strike.

Nurses and doctors have to fetch the food from the kitchen for distribution to patients.

"We are operating normally although the floors and other areas are not clean. Nurses fetch the food for patients in the wards," a chef said.

Some workers at the theatre were found performing their normal chores, though one said: "It is a bit slow since Monday. But we are all the same on duty and exempted from joining the picket."

Nehawu spokesman Mr Chicks Moletsane yesterday accused the hospital authorities of unfairness and said: "They asked the TPA to apply for an interdict restraining us from picketing in the hospital instead of solving the problem."

Baragwanath officials yesterday locked doors leading to the administration block and security personnel barred reporters from entering.

An attempt to reach the hospital spokesman for comment through the telephone also drew a blank.

It was yesterday reported that student nurses at the hospital held a meeting on Monday where a decision was taken to picket daily for an hour in sympathy with the striking workers.

"We are prepared to resume our duties as soon as the authorities respond to our demands," Moletsane said.

De Ridder resigns

Another top official is leaving the SA Housing Trust. GM Johan de Ridder has resigned to further his career in property development. His imminent departure follows close on the resignation of marketing divisional head Johan Raubenheimer who left under a cloud following revelations in the FM that he had falsely claimed to have a doctorate from the University of Pretoria's Business School (Current Affairs June 15).

Housing Trust MD Wallie Conradie stresses that there is no cloud over De Ridder: "In fact it is with regret that we accept his resignation. He's made a big contribution to the trust since joining us four years ago from the Development Bank."

De Ridder points out that he submitted his resignation at the beginning of May and will leave the trust at the end of this month. "However, I expect to continue to be associated with the organisation for some time. There is no question of friction, disillusion or bad blood between myself and the trust," he stresses.

De Ridder worked in the trust's long-term lending arm and was responsible for establishing an effective delivery network before moving to the development arm. He became GM during a reorganisation of the trust in 1990.

Conradie says a successor hasn't been named and De Ridder's responsibilities will be handled by Francois van den Bergh.

De Ridder's new post involves establishing a property development facilitation company as a joint venture between the Rail Commuter Corp and the private sector.
Phone clash led to ‘assault’ with iron rod

A CLERK at a Pretoria insurance company has received eight stitches on the forehead after he was allegedly assaulted with an iron rod by a white manager during an argument at his workplace.

Atteridgeville’s Mr Ben Ngwasheng also has a swollen left eye and cheek as a result of the assault which, he said, followed an argument over a telephone inside an office at Mutual and Federal Centre in Vermeulen Street on Monday morning.

Sowetan has established that Ngwasheng was later suspended - with full pay - pending the outcome of a disciplinary inquiry scheduled for today.

Ngwasheng received eight stitches at the HF Verwoerd Hospital, where he was treated and discharged soon after the incident.

Ngwasheng declined to comment on the matter.

An assistant manager of the company, Miss Denise Brown, also refused to discuss the matter.

"There is no statement but we will be dealing with the case," Brown said.

Ngwasheng’s lawyer yesterday confirmed they had laid charges of assault against the senior white official. They also intended suing him.

Although they had laid charges and were given the docket number of the case, police liaison officer for the Northern Transvaal Captain Andrew Lesch yesterday said the number did not reflect that case.

He asked Ngwasheng or his lawyer to contact him to clarify the matter.

Sowetan has established that Ngwasheng had an argument with two women staffs over the use of a telephone on Monday morning. An argument ensued and the white manager apparently intervened.

He was allegedly manhandled, punched and struck with an iron rod.

Brown declined to comment about allegations that the company was racist and denied blacks the right to use some of the company’s facilities.
Unlimited opportunities in banking!

Careers

For better living.

Modern banking has many facets. A larger bank may have a specialist on mortgage applications while a smaller one may not. But the basic process is the same. Opening an account, checking balance, transferring money, etc. The most visible banking is the teller window. But there are also specialists in personal loans, credit card services, and more. A career in banking can provide an interesting and rewarding career path.
Bank post: Barend withdraws

BY BARRY STREEK

The recently retired Minister of Finance, Mr Barend du Plessis, yesterday withdrew his candidacy to be president of the Development Bank of Southern Africa following opposition to his possible election.

His nomination was opposed by the ANC and the Transkei government, both of whom favoured a more neutral person.

Mr Du Plessis's predecessor as Minister of Finance, Mr Owen Horwood, who had earlier indicated that he wanted to retire, was re-elected president.

The State President's office said yesterday that while an overwhelming majority had supported Mr Du Plessis, consensus could not be achieved among all member countries.

Mr Du Plessis indicated that he did not wish to break the tradition of nomination by full consensus.
Absa staff cuts could reach 4,400

Absa staff cuts could reach 4,400 during the group's rationalisation process, sources close to the bank said yesterday.

Absa human resources group executive Pieter Claassen said the staff complement had been reduced by 1,570 by end-July and he expected this number to reach 2,500 by end-September. Therefore, by end-September the staff rationalisation process would be only 66% completed.

Absa CE Piet Badenhorst said the rationalisation process was on schedule and he was happy with progress. He said there was no official target number for staff cuts.

Staff reductions have also led the group to vacate some of its rented office space. Anglo American Property Services (Ampros) chairman Gerald Leisner said Absa had moved out of its rented space in the African Life building. The group was still paying rental because the lease ran for another three to four years, he said.

It is believed that the bank has moved out of other premises as well.

Leisner confirmed Absa would be negotiating upcoming leases on office space. In addition, he also expected movement out of retail space.

Ampros office leasing manager John Meynard said there had been a lot of movement by Absa, which was a part of its reorganisation, but that this had not affected Ampros.
No takeover for Absa

Bank merger will leave 200 workers ‘surplus’

Banks of South Africa (Absa), control R5 billion of assets in the Cape. The new regional team works from several buildings but will eventually move into one building.

Mr Diederichs said in Cape Town yesterday one aim of the “single, strong management” was to reduce staff to close to 17000 from about 21000 employed by the two institutions at the time Trust Bank’s holding company, Bankorp, was acquired by Absa earlier this year.

Cost benefits of rationalisation would be passed on to customers in “more affordable banking”, he said, adding that the amalgamation of divisions such as computer services had reduced numbers in Trust Bank/Volkskas to roughly 19000.

“Although it is a moving target, the aim is to end up with a little more than 17000 staff,” he said.

“Rationalisation became essential when the banking industry grew fat and lazy during the cartel era when banks fixed prices at will. The company has been revitalised. The lines of communication have been shortened, operating efficiency has been improved and the mood among the many top bankers we have in our management team is aggressive.”

Banking giant swoops in for all, but...
600 lose jobs as merged banks rationalise offices

ROY COKAYNE
PRETORIA. — The Trustbank/Volkskas operating division, part of giant banking group Absa, has completed its rationalisation — and halved the number of head and regional office staff in the division.

Volkskas/Trustbank operating executive Mr Henrie Diedericks said the division had had two head and 10 regional offices countrywide employing 1 200 people.

It now had one head office, five regional offices and employed 500 fewer people, he said in Pretoria.

The cost advantages of the merging of the top management of Volkskas and Trustbank have been enormous. The cost savings have been in people employed, office space used and on other structures," he said.

Its branch network, which employed about 16 000 people and involved about 700 service points, comprised 302 Volkskas and 188 Trustbank branches, plus 516 Volkskas and 94 Trustbank agencies or mini-branches.

The pressure on costs, particularly with the low level of economic activity, was phenomenal, and all banks were under pressure, Mr Diedericks said.

Mr Diedericks said Volkskas had a pre-empt market share of the banking sector in Pretoria and is intended protecting and expanding this share.

He said Trustbank and Volkskas served a specific market segment and had a strong following of clients, and it did not make sense to force them together.

"While they will keep their names in the market place, their head offices and regional structures have been merged. The pooling of resources has given us one of the most experienced management corps in the country.

"There is one general manager controlling all Volkskas and Trustbank branches in each region. The branch share the same credit, administration and human resources services, but each has its own business development and client service team.

"Trustbank is a broadly based urban bank, while Volkskas is focused more on the Afrikaans-oriented community. Each has a spread of about 60/40 in individual and business and professional clients," Mr Diedericks said.

Mr Diedericks said a more aggressive marketing campaign involving Trustbank and Volkskas focusing on the products offered by the two banks and the quality of service was about to begin.

Mr Diedericks said some products, such as a cheque account, had become expensive and they were about to introduce a new product that would address the question of affordability.

He said new products would be developed to cater for a broader client base in South Africa and include all language and population groups.

"We would like to have a broader base. The acceptability of Trustbank to other language and population groups is much bigger than that of Volkskas, but Volkskas also has the capacity to attract clients across these barriers," he said.

Mr Diedericks said it was too early to decide on how on their approach in the new South Africa.

"The new South Africa still has show its true colours. We will have to see who the major players are going to be before we can take a decision on whether we need to shake our feathers," he said.

About 200 workers will become "surplus" in Cape Town as a result of the merger of Trust Bank and Volkskas regional offices. But about 70 percent are expected to find jobs elsewhere in the banks, according to Mr Diedericks.
LOA keeps tabs on agents' commissions

THE principle that brokers and agents should receive equivalent remuneration for the same level of production is important to the life assurance industry and the Life Offices' Association (LOA) says it goes to great lengths to maintain "equivalence of reward".

LOA deputy director Jurie Wessels says: "The maximum commission a life assurer may pay a broker is stipulated in the Insurance Act. The law says nothing about agents' commissions."

This is because agents can receive remuneration in a number of ways, such as company cars and housing subsidies, which would be complex to regulate.

"Because of the types of benefits mentioned, and also because agents get offices, secretarial services and equipment that brokers have to buy or rent, the cash component of agents' commission is much lower."

Anomalies

All of this makes it impossible to ensure equivalent commission levels through legislation, but the LOA monitors equivalence of reward, says Wessels.

"We point out any anomalies to the assurers and get them to bring their agents' remuneration in line with the regulations for brokers. We also report on these surveys to the Registrar of Insurance."

A small variation in favour of agents is allowed, mainly because agents do not have the options that brokers have in structuring their taxable income. For example, an agent has to use the offices provided by his employer, while a broker may have expensive offices (and a large tax deduction for expenses) or may decide to have cheaper offices and a bigger taxable income.

Wessels says: "We are aware that there are brokers who believe agents' commissions are too high. However, we do not believe that this is the case. One of our indicators is that many life assurance agents become brokers while few brokers become agents."
Construction slowdown impacts on Blue Circle

Severely depressed activity in the building and construction industry has led to a 23,5 percent decline in Blue Circle's earnings to R27,8 million for the six months ended June.

Turnover at R376 million was R6 million down from the corresponding period in the previous year.

High capital expenditure and the seasonally higher working capital required during the first half of the year resulted in substantially higher financing charges of R7,6 million compared with R748,000 previously.

This was however partially offset by a lower tax rate due to allowances on capex.

Tax paid amounted to R7,2 million compared with the previous amount of R15,3 million.

A dividend of 27,3c a share has been declared out of earnings of 62,3c a share. — Sapa.

London offers four bursaries for blacks

The City of London is to offer four bursaries to black employees of South African financial institutions, the Lord Mayor of London Sir Brian Jenkins said in Johannesburg yesterday.

Sir Brian said the bursaries would enable the four candidates to study further in financial and legal services at the London Polytechnic summer school.

Recognition

He said the bursaries were in recognition of the long-standing business connections between his city and South Africa and to mark the first visit to the country by a Lord Mayor of London since the Second World War.

Expanding on his purpose in visiting South Africa, Sir Brian said it was to sustain and support London's role as a business centre.

Transactions

London was the world's financial capital, outpacing both New York and Tokyo in terms of international business transactions, he said.

He pointed out that about twenty percent of the world's banks and insurance companies had their headquarters in the British capital city.

Estate agents 'need further education'

The need for continuing compulsory education in the real estate industry after the estate agents board exam is an issue newly elected president of the SA Institute of Estate Agents Ian Taylor intends to pursue.

"Many courses are available for people in the industry but, except for the board exam, none of these is compulsory, he said.

The main reason for continued education was to improve the quality of estate agents and protect the public, he said.

The institute would discuss the matter with the Estate Agents Board, but Taylor said the first move would be to establish the groundwork for changes.

A lack of education among estate agents rather than a deliberate misleading of clients was the main reason behind most cases in which people had lost money or not received the best advice.

He said the quickest way to upgrade the level of education in the real estate industry was to have an examination for principals—estate agent owners or managers.

"This course should be compulsory before an agent is allowed to manage an estate agency office. A principal who is fully trained can better advise his agents, and that in turn will protect clients' interests more fully," he said.

In the US, which has been the world leader in real estate for some time, an estate agent has to complete a minimum number of courses a year before being re-issued with an operating licence.

While the institute already holds various annual seminars at its branches countrywide, and the National Property Academy holds formal courses, these would need to be extended, Taylor said.
CAREER

Learning to be a banker

As the bank can provide various ways for the trainee to become qualified, particular school subjects are not imperative, but commercial subjects such as Business Economics and Accountancy will be advantageous.

To apply for a position at a bank contact your nearest branch or visit the Personnel Selection Centre. Make an appointment for an interview, and take your identity document, your latest school results such as your Prelim marks, testimonials from your school and any other certificates for academic achievement, which you may have with you when you go to complete the application form.

Permanent employment depends on whether your matric pass is considered satisfactory by the bank.

Modern banking covers a wide range of areas. Indoors training enables staff to reach their fullest potential. Training material is designed and developed by a team of specialists to meet the specific needs of the staff-in-training. Inhouse training has different facets.

- On-the-job training: A career in banking can start early in life. As soon as you have completed matriculation examinations you can apply for a position in the bank. Here an expert in the branch will teach you how to do a particular job.
- Skills training modules: these modules consist of booklets, videos, audio tapes and computer exercises. The banker-in-training is allocated time during working hours to study training material.
- Platform training: some trainees are nominated to attend training courses at one of the bank's training centres. These courses consist of classroom lectures, a test and a follow-up assignment to complete at the branch where the trainee works.
- The prospective banker is given a five-day orientation course on first joining a bank. On the very first day of orientation those questions concerning conditions of employment and the what, how, and where of a new environment — which are often a mystery for months in a new job — are answered in a fun question-and-answer booklet.

With the help of a staff official or the branch administrator, the trainee banker will soon know for example when he/she will be paid, and how much; what will be deducted from the salary and the amount of allowances; how many days leave will be forthcoming and in which months of the year leave will be available; the names and titles of the supervisor and colleagues; working hours and the procedure for signing the attendance register; tea and lunch breaks; a job description, and administrative procedures such as the use of the telephone for private and official use, where to post letters, make photocopies and obtain stationery.

A further part of the orientation is the more intricate documentation like filling in the IRP2 form to register as a taxpayer; application for membership to a medical aid society and running an own bank account.

Scores quitting the profession because of recession

By Joshua Raboroko

SCORES of estate agents were quitting the profession as a result of the recession, the Transvaal director of Pam Golding Properties, Mr Ronald Ennik, said this week.

There was, however, still a desperate need for trained, dedicated professionals in the job, he said.

“...we are presently expanding and recruiting and have already been approached by a number of top agents from smaller companies.”

But the market may be vibrant for a few black estate agents because of the shortage of homes.

Secretary of the Sebeto Builders Forum Mr Chris Jiyane said there were few black estate agents as a result of the policy of apartheid.

But the market was open and “we are working hard to compete favourably with our white counterparts”, he said.

Ennik said in sharp contrast to the general trend, his company was expanding and they needed highly professional staff to support that growth.

“The exodus is from the bottom end of the market and consists of the people who in boom times think they can make easy money. The recession quickly flushes them out.”
'Blessings for hard work'

WORKING 16 to 18 hours a day would bring South Africans wonderful blessings, Dr Piet Koornhof, former South African Ambassador to the United States, told delegates at the annual conference of the Cape Assurance Insurance Industry Liaison Committee (CALLCOM) held in Cape Town.

He said hard work, humour and a positive mental attitude could carry South Africans through into the New South Africa, which would be an example to the world of how to live in peace and harmony.

ANC economist Patrick Ncube urged the promotion of small business to help create jobs.

He suggested innovative banking, credit guarantee schemes, group loans and the establishment of special financial institutions as a means of lending to the small and informal business sectors.
Nedcor Bank College opens

NEDCOR Bank yesterday officially opened its R2.5m Nedcor Bank College, offering employees a holistic banking education.

The college will start with a pilot group of 65 students, initially on a "floating" campus, using rented training facilities.

The curriculum offered at the college covers professional, life, utilisation and management skills (Plum) and includes study skills, self-image development, systems thinking, social interaction skills, marketing and decision-management. The course will interlink theory and practice.

It will also offer a number of basic core studies for the educationally or socially disadvantaged. These will include literacy, computer skills, assertiveness training and leadership development.

Most of the courses are registered with the Manpower Department, Damb and the Institute of Bankers and thus students will receive recognised certificates.

The group believes the college will make a contribution to the social reconstruction and normalisation of Sa and that it will keep both the organisation and its personnel at the forefront of innovative thinking and creative competition.

"Our business logic and strategic planning indicate that to survive and remain competitive in our changing markets, we need to develop our future management now.

"Both from a business and socio-political point of view this urgently requires us to develop the skills of all racial groups in a non-discriminatory context," a statement says.

Candidates for the college will be selected through a combination of recommendations from management, personnel consultants and themselves. Students will have a strong say in their curriculum."
Try to say it with comics

Comic strips usually amuse and entertain, but, as more and more life assurance schemes are finding out in South Africa today, they can also educate.

Employee benefits are a complex issue at the best of times, but during negotiations between workers and employers, workers are often at a disadvantage because they do not know enough about insurance, pensions and other benefits.

To help them, Old Mutual has pioneered easy-to-read comic strips to explain these complex issues to workers.

At least two are already in circulation. One has been produced for its employee benefits division and the other for Ioor.

They graphically explain the differences between, for example, pension funds and provident funds, why these are needed in today's society and what's done with the money in the fund to ensure that it grows and/or is used to back social programmes.

Explaining the move, Old Mutual's general manager in charge of employee benefits, Mr Garth Griffin, said negotiations about employee benefits were usually highly emotional, with rhetoric and a lack of realism predominating.

"When participants better understand the issues and each other's viewpoints, it is possible to move quickly towards practical resolution — for the benefit of all," said Griffin. — LYNDIA Loxton

Last year's win gave us a boost—Southern

WINNING the Gold Award in 1991 has done a great deal to enhance the image of the company in the eyes of the Southern Life employees, the purchasing public and prospective female employees, MD Jan Calitz says.

It has been a source of immense pride and pleasure to everyone at Southern, he says.

"But while it has been wonderful to receive official recognition for our achievements in the sphere of female advancement, it has also made us ultra aware of our enormous responsibilities as an employer of significant numbers of disadvantaged employees from other groupings in the SA workplace."

Calitz says the award has given the group a "huge incentive" not only to maintain the positive growth climate Southern has created for women, but also to devise new ways of empowering the full spectrum of the group's staff, "enabling them to all realise their true potential".

His sentiments are echoed by Southern's women staffers.

Deputy GM Brenda Doyle says Southern is a large organisation with a "small-company ethos".

She says she has never encountered any form of discrimination against women. "People are respected for their contribution to the company and encouraged to attain their maximum potential."

Assistant GM Jenny Carter says whatever opportunities arise in the organisation are open to women.

"If I have the ability and enthusiasm to do something, I am confident that I will be taken seriously."

She says that while there is still the continuing challenge of confronting "in-grained male prejudice" on the part of some male colleagues, she does not allow their attitude to deter her, as discrimination is against the organisation's basic philosophy.

Working for a company like Southern not only makes it easier for women to have careers, but also encourages them to do so, says assistant GM Maureen Rawlins.

She says that the top management's openness and ability to listen has removed any obstacles for career-minded women.

Senior manager Margaretha Stevenson says the fact that she is a woman has never entered the picture at Southern.

"As Southerners we are in the unique and extremely fortunate position of being able to do whatever it takes for us to realise our personal aspirations and career ambitions in a corporate atmosphere that offers us freedom and flexibility as well as the necessary nurturing."

Winning the Gold Award has been an affirmation of the values of equality and will spur the company on to greater achievements, says senior manager Jennifer Preiss.

She says that given the history of discrimination against women in the workplace, Southern compares very favourably with other financial institutions.

Senior manager Trish Acton says that over the years she has seen the firm move away from an outdated paternalistic attitude towards female staff to a climate of empowerment.

"Today, as a woman at Southern, one has the right to aspire to any position in the company, knowing that one will be judged solely on merit and performance."

Award raises awareness of responsibilities — Calitz
FedSure wins employment policy award

INSURANCE group FedSure won the SA Federation of Business and Professional Women's National Gold Award at a banquet in Sandton last night.

The award is presented to the company which has actively promoted its female personnel to achieve career growth and status, based on ability and talent.

Guest speaker Francis Kendall said men and women differed and it was time to accept this.

More creative men would study and imitate any female skill which improved their competitive edge — and would be the first to devolve their businesses, Kendall said.

These were the people who would value the skills, working abilities and the high administrative competence of their women employees.

Companies could improve their productivity and competitive advantage by making use of the special and different skills of men and women, she added.

The award was judged from 21 qualifying companies and resulted in six finalists. The other finalists were Oxford University Press Southern Africa, Southern Life, Pick 'n Pay, Anglo Alpha and SPL.

Bankers walk out on Sechold

By JULIE WALKER

NDH BANK'S principal staff members walked out of their new Rosebank premises in Johannesburg this week after major shareholder Sechold rejected a backed bid by management for its 75% stake in NDH.

NDH is a respected and profitable trader. NDH management holds the 25% not in Sechold hands.

Managers are said to be unhappy about the way Sechold rewarded them in the light of good profits from NDH.

Sechold chief executive Arthur Kelly says the board rejected the bid for NDH. Certain management and staff members from NDH indicated their intention to leave the bank and pursue their own interests.

NDH directors Bill Scotchler (also on the Sechold board) and Dave Barber confirm Mr. Kelly's statement.

Another director, five dealers and an accountant are part of the mutiny.

Sechold has appointed Craig Cricca and Michiel Kotze joint managing directors of NDH. Mr. Kelly expects NDH to continue to achieve satisfactory profits under new management.

The bid was backed by an undisclosed third party — most market sources suggest NBS Holdings. But NBS general manager, finance, Paul Leiphwright denies the talk. He confirms that since the failed bid, NBS has been talking to Mr. Scotchler and company, but any decision on their engagement will need to be taken by the NBS board.

It remains to be seen how NBS directors would enjoy appointing a team of dealers used to earning R500 000 or more a year — more than they could realistically hope to earn as directors.
SAA laying off 2 200 in face of huge losses

By ROGER MAKING

SAA will reduce its workforce by at least 2 200, mostly through voluntary severance packages.

However, those who do not leave voluntarily, or are retrenched, may find themselves being retrenched with a less favourable pay-out.

It is believed that a "considerable" number of employees have accepted voluntary severance packages.

But those who reject the first-phase option could be retrenched in months to come in a second round of reductions.

Both middle and top management will be affected by the cutbacks.

Not all those leaving are sub-standard performers unsure of whether they can hold down their jobs.

Nutshell

Without naming anyone, SAA chief executive officer Mike Myburgh says that among those who have elected to go are excellent managers capable of making a "career elsewhere".

"Some of them are the sort of people we would have liked to have kept, but this would have demotivated them to the point that it would be better to let them go.

"In a nutshell, we hope that those who are under-achieving are aware of the fact and will elect to leave. But if they don’t, we will have to retrench them."

It is believed that it will cost SAA less than R18 million to pay off 20% of its complement of 11 900. By cutting 20% off its annual salary bill of about R700 million, SAA stands to save R140 million a year.

A further 10% of R70 million will be saved by pegging salaries.

Overheads

SAA’s losses for the year are expected to be more than R200 million.

It employs more than 300 people an aircraft compared with an average of 238 similar-size airlines around the world — a difference of 25%.

Besides staff cuts, SAA will rationalise overheads — like unprofitable routes — with the combined savings being poured back into the airline.

Mike Myburgh says: "We are looking to improve our service to passengers by motivating staff through refreshment training. In effect, we are putting our faith in our staff."

Also planned is greater investment in technology — such as wider use of seat-back video screens and more efficient aircraft so as to compete on an equal footing with international carriers flying into SA.

Stronger alliances with other Southern African carriers are also envisaged.

Mike Myburgh says: "We must broaden our base in the region and become a useful ally to our neighbouring carriers.

"In this way we will have more clout with the incoming international airlines who will become more dependent on us to get their passengers into the interior."

Premium blow faces brokers

By TERRY BETTY

EARNINGS of insurance brokers will drop because they are not allowed to hold premium income for long.

Registrar of Financial Institutions Nico Fourie has, against the advice of short-term insurers and brokers, amended regulations governing Section 20bis of the Insurance Act with effect from the beginning of December.

Brokers receiving commission from customers will have to pay the money to the insurance companies 15 days after the end of the month in which it is received.

At present, brokers have to pay the insurer about 40 days after the month the premium falls due.

Fourie says the existing system was introduced only two years ago and is working well.

The main problem is the cost and inconvenience to insurance companies and brokers, who at great expense introduce administrative procedures and computer systems. They will now have to alter their systems.

For some companies it will merely involve changing programs. For others, it will involve a costly change to computer systems.

Mr Fourie says the intention is to get the money from customers to the insurer as soon as possible.

SAA Eagle managing director Piet Mouton notes that insurers will receive some money faster. But the present system is not, and he sees little reason to change it.

Mr Mouton says it will be a major problem for brokers handling the business of a large group of companies.

Not all payments go through brokers. Mr Mouton says 50% to 60% of personal lines business is paid through brokers. About 50% of commercial and industrial premium payments go through brokers.

He says this is necessary because brokers have records of all customers, are in direct contact with them and know the premium amount.

First solar battery

FIRST National Battery is to launch the first range of commercially produced solar-power batteries early next year. Until now, batteries designed for solar applications have been imported at great expense. First National believes their introduction will help to promote the use of solar power in SA.
Supreme brokers rebuked

First Bowling & Associates has suspended four of its brokers for contravening their conditions of employment and placing clients' funds with the Supreme group.

This move follows the announcement by Absa on Tuesday that it would take action against any of its brokers who had contravened policy by promoting investments in Supreme. It is believed that nine brokers are being investigated and could face suspension or dismissal.

First National Bank spokesman Norman Antonelli said yesterday none of FNB's staff were involved in placing clients' money in Supreme, but brokers from its 50%-owned subsidiary First Bowling had been found to have done this.

"This goes against our terms of reference as any investments outside the group have to be authorised by national management and this was not done in some cases," he said.

First Bowling life director Charles van Rensburg said the company had been investigating the extent of its involvement. Four of its brokers had been suspended already.

"We have had a few customer inquiries and know of a few brokers who were involved in placing clients' money with Supreme. However, they were acting outside their scope of employment as any investment outside the group needs written management approval."

Although its involvement seemed limited at the moment, one broker had concluded 39 deals with Supreme on behalf of FNB clients. Each of these cases would be considered, he said.

However, a major problem was that there were no records of these deals. First Bowling was taking the matter "seriously" and would do everything to ensure the best interests of its clients were upheld, Van Rensburg said.

Standard Bank financial services MD Gavin Dingley said none of its clients had reported investments made with Supreme.

"We have had only one such incident and that was in 1990 when one of our consultants in Natal encouraged bank clients to place funds in Supreme. This was followed by disciplinary action," he said.

The bank had a clear policy that clients' funds had to be investments within the group, except for assured investments. This policy formed part of any consultant's conditions of employment, he said.

In the 1990 incident the broker had placed the commission from the deals in his personal account, which constituted theft. The bank had written to the customers involved explaining that the consultant had acted outside his brief.

"We told them we would become involved to see that they were not prejudiced if this became necessary while that investment was held. But should they choose to roll this investment over, we would not be liable."

If any claims arose as a result of the provisional liquidation of Supreme Holdings, and Supreme Investment Holdings, the bank would examine each case on merit, Dingley said.

Nedbank commercial division director Jack de Blanche said he had received no reports of the bank's brokers having invested clients' money with Supreme.

"At the time of the Masterbond collapse, all staff were instructed not to invest funds with any other financial institution except those specifically identified by us," he said.

Nedcor union declares a dispute

The largest of two unions organising Nedcor's 16,000 employees, Nedcor Staff Society, has declared a dispute after the bank tried to impose a joint bargaining forum and threatened to cancel its recognition agreement.

A Nedcor Staff Society spokesman said Nedcor declared a dispute with his union last month after it refused to participate in a joint bargaining forum with the Financial Services Workers' Union.

He said Nedcor had tried "unilaterally" to impose the forum after six years of separate negotiations.

"The conditions of workers in Nedcor differ widely because of the incorporation of Perm, Syfrets and UAL with Nedbank. Nedcor wants to use the joint forum to impose uniform conditions on us all," he said.

Nedcor had also given notice to withdraw recognition, threatened to discontinue negotiations unless they happened in the joint forum and threatened to impose on the staff society any settlement reached with other unions.

Nedcor's "heavy-handed conduct" and "bad faith bargaining" had forced the staff society to declare a dispute.

The spokesman refused to be named for fear of victimisation.

Nedcor could not be reached for comment last night.

Plans to beef up security of investors

FORKER London, Stock Exchange chief surveillance officer Bob Wilkinson has made 37 recommendations on surveillance at the JSE after an investigation arranged by the Financial Services Board.

FSB executive officer Piet Badenhorst said in the annual report yesterday Wilkinson's recommendations were being followed up with, a view to implementation. The FSB wanted to improve investors' security "with regard to the conduct of stockbrokers and the dealers of institutions who conduct business with stockbrokers".

A request for the appointment of a commission of inquiry into the finances of medical aid schemes and their unequal competition with insurers had been made. Badenhorst said the FSB believed "the existing pay-as-you-go method of financing has resulted in serious financial problems for a large number of medical schemes and that enabling legislation for improved financial supervision of these schemes is of the utmost importance for the members of these schemes".

The report also noted the privatisation of public sector pension funds was on the cards. The FSB was involved in drawing up enabling legislation for registration of public sector pension funds as private funds.

It saw its future challenges as integration of financial services, rationalisation of institutions and services, extending self-regulation and consumer protection, enhancing investor protection, educating investors and technological development.

The majority of FSB staff members had come from the private sector, thus augmenting the expertise in actuarial, accounting, legal and management personnel. But there were several areas where expertise had to be introduced.
100 000 formal sector jobs lost in painful '92

By Thabo Leshilo
Labour Reporter

Close to 100 000 formal sector jobs were lost during 1992 and workers experienced a sharp decline in real wages, experts have told The Star.

The South African Chamber of Business put the number of jobs lost in the private sector at 85 000 and the public sector at 5 790 by the second half of this year.

A spokesman said the mining industry shed 29 000 jobs, manufacturing 35 000, construction 18 000, commerce 5 500 while the service sector, which includes finance, banks and insurance, employed 2 220 more people.

Steel and Engineering Industries of SA (Seifsa) executive director Brian Angus said the metal and engineering industries had, since the beginning of the year, cut staff by 49 000, bringing the industry to its lowest workforce in 20 years.

According to the Chamber, 300 000 jobs have been lost since the second half of 1989, which marked the beginning of SA's longest recession.

The situation is even bleaker considering that only 4 percent of the country's approximately 250 000 matriculants are expected to find employment in the formal economy in 1993.

Research by industrial relations consultants Andrew Levy and Associates, shows that on average, wage increases were far below the inflation rate for the first time in six years—from 16.1 percent in 1991 to 12.6 percent this year.

However, there was still some hope that things would shape up next year said Cosatu negotiations co-ordinator Jayendra Naidoo.

"Although the National Peace Accord was grounded this year, it has now been consolidated, raising hopes for a political settlement next year, which is vital for an upswing in the economy."

Naidoo hailed the creation of the restructured National Manpower Commission (NMC) and the National Economic Forum (NEF) and the talks between Cosatu and the SA Consultative Committee on Labour Affairs as "the most positive" developments.

"A big plus for the labour movement was the extension of Basic Conditions of Employment Act to farm and domestic workers."

Added Angus: "It has been a very difficult year for employers in the metal and engineering industries, marked by a lot of confrontation and resort to legal proceedings."

Due to a deterioration in the economy, the industries were forced to settle for the "quite low" wage increase of 9.1 percent after strikes by the National Union of Metalworkers and the Metal and Electrical Workers' Union.

"Now that events of 1992 are behind us, we hope to make progress regarding the future of the industry and training next year."

Angus predicted the economy would pick up during the first half of 1993 if negotiations were back on track early in the new year.
Skills shortage best overcome by improving Black training

By Stephen Cranston

Severe skills shortages at senior and middle management level will be the most important challenge facing the insurance broking industry in the next 25 years, says Mike Hofmeyr, managing director of PPV Insurance Brokers.

"Our industry will be competing with insurers and reinsurers in a shrinking labour pool for the people with the best skills," he says.

In the top seven life companies, black managers represent 2.7 percent of black staff, while white managers represent 28.1 percent of white staff.

"In South Africa unequal and inadequate education, the brain drain of the '80s which dealt the insurance industry a severe blow, and very low immigration figures have combined to create these skills shortages, as well as an education shortage at entry level.

"We face a desperate shortage of managerial, engineering and technological skills," he says.

Technology in the insurance industry represents an ideal opportunity to cut down on unnecessary duplication of activity between insurers and intermediaries.

"With greater trust and goodwill between the two parties this shortage will not exist 20 years from now. Electronic Data Interchange will easily facilitate this.

"While technological innovation in manufacturing most often emanates from materials and methods, in service industries the primary wellspring is information.

"Data is the most valuable raw material which service firms possess even though it never appears on the balance sheet. We are going to need people with the skills to process this data into a format upon which management decisions can be based."

"The ANC has already outlined its future stand on business with calls for affirmative action and economic empowerment of blacks, including the acquisition of knowledge, skills and expertise.

"Proactive support and encouragement on joint ventures and partnerships with black enterprises and black people in general are also sought."

Hofmeyr argues that, in the light of this, tokenism is out of the question.

Geometric situations, such as firms owned by whites but with blacks, will be exposed for what they are and lose credibility with the public.

"There are predictions that more than 20 percent of the clerical labour force will be black by 1995 and at senior level, predictions are that companies in the insurance industry will have in the region of 10 percent black executives by then.

"Insurance companies are spending between two and three percent of their income on training, and this figure will have to double within the next four years.

"We may see organisational structures change quite dramatically as the skills shortage deepens, since most organisations which follow popular management wisdom based on divisionalised structures and decentralised authority, will have to move to functional structures with more centralised control and better use of skills over a wider front."
There are 10 specific symptoms that should arouse suspicion of fraud in your company, says JCOI President Stuart Morris:

- A dominant chief executive or manager who often short-circuits any established systems or controls.
- A lack of understanding of key controls, especially in any computerised systems central to one specific staff.
- Employees in financial posts who are over-protective of their particular job routines, rarely take holidays, work excessive overtime.
- Poor segregation of duties between staff, leaving room to compromise any controls and leaving scope for fraud or theft.
- Slack accounting systems, spotted by the failure of accounts to balance accurately or the absence of explanations why settlement of any accounts was long overdue.
- Staff susceptible to temptations to grab any opportunities to swindle the company.
- Low morale and lack of motivation were other danger signals, along with under-staffing and poor management systems.

"Many of these indications in themselves are commonsense items and may seem obvious," says Morris. "They should not be underestimated. The adage that prevention is better than cure is never truer than in the case of fraud."

"The ideal solutions lie in forms of control that will limit the possibilities of fraud occurring. The dilemma is that a routine function is a predictable control and therefore one which can be avoided or over-ridden by the enterprising fraudster."

Basic preventative measures should include a corporate code of conduct, effective internal controls, thorough reference checks on new employees, more management focus on day-to-day operations, and tighter auditing procedures.
THE business world has been stunned by disclosures that no less than R1 billion may be involved in office scams that have been uncovered in a new crackdown on white-collar crime.

The Office for Serious Economic Offences, a special unit created by the Minister of Justice to counter the increasing complexity of rackets run inside business, such as computer fiddles and high-finance dodges around foreign exchange controls, confirms that a new wave of arrests of fraud suspects is imminent.

The roll-call of businessmen joining the rogues gallery of fraud culprits is also likely to be swollen at the end of an even longer list of investigations being handled by the SAP Commercial Branch.

Johannesburg Chamber of Commerce and Industry (JCCI) experts estimate that the number of fraud cases coming to the surface has grown by as much as 65 percent in the past five years. Even worse, the value of swindles has rocketed by a phenomenal 700 percent.

JCCI president Stuart Morris, himself a specialist in fraud detection as deputy chief executive of the KPMG Aiken and Peat firm of accountants and auditors, has made a personal analysis of the problem — and now produced a set of guidelines for companies to follow in a counter-attack on the crime wave.

The first prerequisite, he believes, is that company directors accept the blunt fact that the responsibility for the detection and prevention of fraud must be carried at boardroom level.

Management, he tells them in a chamber newsletter, is involved in 25 percent of the frauds. Still more startling, the frauds committed by management account for as much as 75 percent of the total amount involved in rip-offs.

"Management" fraud, he writes, "is the most alarming type of fraud since it is usually of the highest value and often difficult to detect.

"In South Africa, incidents of such fraud are increasing on a daily basis."

On the other hand, it was management that discovered most cases of fraud — 40 percent as a result of internal audits they initiated and an additional 25 percent by accident in office routines.

One special tip to employers was to ensure that staff made regular use of their leave and time-off entitlements.

Budget deficit ‘easily financed’

Institutions set to free up R35bn in 1993

MASSIVE cash flows to institutions have emerged virtually unscathed from the recession, with analysts estimating the amount of new cash available for investment next year at about R30bn-R40bn.

While the amount would be almost unchanged from this year, analysts said the flow of contractual savings was still big enough easily to finance even a huge Budget deficit next year without putting significant upward pressure on interest rates.

Even the combined effect of the recession and strong demand for finance from the public sector would not temper the “hothouse” effect at work in SA’s closed financial markets.

Southern Life investments GM Paul Beachy-Head said the recession had put a damper on the growth in funds flowing to the institutions. Surrenders and lapses of policies had become more common, while less new business had been sold. Pension funds had been affected by retrenchment payouts. On a net basis, benefits paid had gone up. He estimated the flow of contractual savings to institutions next year at about R35bn.

The state pension funds are not included in the flow of funds to private institutions and could add up to another R20bn to the new cash available for investment. Virtually the entire amount is usually invested in government stock. Beachy-Head noted that the state pension funds had also been affected by retrenchments.

“Nevertheless, government will easily finance its deficit next year,” he predicted, although he saw the possibility of higher long-term interest rates depending on the amount government needed to borrow.

Syretts Managed Assets spokesman Leon Campher said the estimates were at the lower end of the range of predictions. He saw R35bn-R40bn as possible, noting that the percentage of new premium flow to benefits paid out was increasing.

He said the flow of state funds to the Public Investment Commissioners could add another R17bn to the finance available for investment. But Campher agreed a big deficit would be “quite easily financed” from the flow of contractual savings.

Analyst at a stockbroking firm put the flow to institutions at about R35bn. “Contractual savings had been affected adversely by the recession, while government’s deficit had been rising rapidly — a situation which would have to turn around if strong upward pressure on interest rates were to be avoided.”

Moreover he did not expect the public sector’s borrowing requirements to have a significant effect on the financial markets.

Estimates of the Budget deficit next year vary between R30bn-R35bn, depending on the extent to which government wants to increase revenue by raising taxes. Finance Minister Derek Keys has said the 1992/93 deficit will reach R23bn. If the deficit is reduced to R28bn, it would still be more than 6% of GDP. Economist Louis Geldenhuys of Nedbank, Mouton & Kitchoff said this would be possible with a 3% real decline in spending and no compensation for fiscal drag.

The number of people employed in financial services rose by more than 5,000 last year at a time when recession caused hundreds of thousands of employees in other sectors to lose their jobs.

Latest Central Statistical Service figures show that the number of people in full-time employment in banks, building societies and insurance companies rose by 5,337 in the year to end-September 1992.

Over the same period, more than 47,000 jobs were lost in the manufacturing industry.

Financial services did not feel the effects of the recession to the same extent as the rest of the economy.

In the national accounts, finance made a positive contribution to real GDP in the third quarter last year while manufacturing's contribution fell by almost 2.5% in real terms.

But the rise in employment in financial services came at a time when some major banks, notably Absa, were conducting rationalisation exercises.

Despite the rationalisation efforts in the industry, bank and building society staffs grew by more than 3,000 over the period.

First National Bank was one of the institutions whose staff numbers grew last year, the increase coming after two years of declining staff numbers that reflected a rationalisation drive.

A spokesman said there had been a small increase in the number of people employed last year, as there had been "quite an expansion in business".

Also increasing its staff numbers was the Standard Bank group. A spokesman said the increase had exceeded the 2.6% rise for the financial services industry as a whole.

He said staff numbers were not only related to the business cycle but to longer-term strategies undertaken by the bank.

Absa and Nedcor said their staff numbers had declined in line with their rationalisation plans.

An analyst said the smaller banks had done well during the recession and would not have needed to shed staff.

Markets in which banks traded did well last year, with capital market volumes surging and derivatives taking off.

Sefisa economist Michael MacDonald said the growth in the services industry, relative to the rest of the economy, was a global phenomenon in the industrialised world.

He added that part of the reason for the manufacturing sector shedding jobs was that it was becoming more capital intensive.

The growth of the financial sector could not take up the slack as it was highly automated.

But the financial sector would help create jobs as a result of the drive to improve the provision of banking services to wider sections of the community, MacDonald said.
Bank is racist' - fired employee

By Joe Mdhluela
Consumer Reporter

For young Jabulani Sithole, former employee of the bank that claims to be "looking ahead" of time, the slogan is hollow.

The Standard Bank Atrode branch dismissed him three weeks ago, alleging he had defrauded them of R18 000.

This was in spite of the fact that an Alberton magistrate had withdrawn the charges the previous week, saying no material evidence had been placed before him.

A distraught Sithole said: "Standard Bank is a terrible employer, with a lousy industrial relations policy. They are not what they profess to be in newspaper and television advertisements. They are a racist institution, victimising employees on the basis of colour."

He said the slogan "looking ahead..." was a lot of hot air, repeated merely for marketing purposes.

"The sloganeering is hollow talk... nothing more than self-aggrandisement by the bank," said the 26-year-old Sithole.

Instead, Sithole has expressed more confidence in the country's courts of law.

"Why, even the court that tried me simply withdrew the charge because the bank had failed to prove evidence to back up their claim.

"Now, in their own tribunal, they have the gall to overrule the court's decision. That is stinking stuff," he said.

"Why is Sithole so bitter?"

He is walking the streets of Daveyton unemployed, even though the bank could not prove its allegations in court.

After a few appearances, the magistrate withdrew the charges on December 10 because there was no implicating evidence.

"The bank, in their letter of dismissal, charged that Sithole had acted dishonestly.

"We advise that you have been dismissed from our service with effect from December 23 for your dishonesty relating to your involvement in the fraudulent call account withdrawal, and the subsequent encashment of the bank cheque."

The bank said this after their internal disciplinary inquiry on December 23.

Asked why the institution went ahead to punish Sithole even though the Magistrate's Court had withdrawn the charges, a spokesman for the bank said he could only speak for the bank and not the magistrate.

"The disciplinary hearing is an internal matter and it has made its ruling.

"If Mr Sithole is unhappy about the judgment, he may appeal. I would argue that he appeals, rather than taking the matter to the media.

"As for the court's decision to withdraw the matter, I cannot speak for the magistrate," he said.

Sithole has denied he had anything to do with the encashment of the R18 000, except having to write out a cheque for the client's benefit.

Even then, he had alerted senior officials about the discrepancies in signatures on the actual cheque and the specimen signature kept on the bank's files.

The two officials, a black and white women, overlooked the discrepancy and insisted that Sithole must make out a cheque for R18 000, he said.

The bank could not accept that Sithole's responsibility went as far as writing out a cheque, with the rest being processed by "authority above me".

"Despite this knowledge, they went ahead to punish an innocent man.

"I actually find this whole saga laughable. The cheque I had written out had been approved and verified by my seniors, a black and white senior officer of the branch.

"How can I, a junior, take the blame for what had been approved by my seniors. This whole thing is farcical. I am convinced that I have been victimised because I am just a little man within the system," said Sithole.

Sithole said it was interesting that only one of the senior persons who had approved the transaction had been dismissed. The senior white employee has not been dismissed, he said.

"Was it by coincidence that a white woman, party to the same decision to cash the cheque, remained employed, while a black woman was dismissed?" asked Sithole.

"The only conclusion I can come to is that the bank is racist."

But black employee was still discharged:

Racism claim is denied by bank after dismissal

By Joe Mdhlela

The Standard Bank has strongly denied claims by a former employee that it was racist and victimised employees because of their colour.

This is in response to an article published on this page last Wednesday.

Standard Bank Human Resources general manager Dr John Verster was responding to allegations by Mr Jabulani Sithole.

Sithole claimed he and another black employee had been dismissed for dishonesty while no action was taken against a white woman allegedly also involved in the cashing of an R18 000 cheque at the bank’s Arode branch. He was reported as saying the bank was racist.

Verster said the bank had a well-established disciplinary procedure which it followed independently of any criminal charges brought by the State. Disciplinary action was taken irrespective of the race or sex of an employee where circumstances justified it.

In the case in question, the due process in the bank’s disciplinary procedure was followed. After a thorough internal investigation and disciplinary hearing, Sithole and another employee were dismissed.

“Our disciplinary procedure acknowledges and provides for the right of an employee to appeal against disciplinary action taken by the bank. An appeal has been submitted by one of the employees and is receiving full and careful consideration. Furthermore, arrangements were made some time ago for Sithole to have access to information to assist him in submitting an appeal should he wish to do so,” Verster said.

As an employer, Standard Bank adhered to the principles of non-racism and non-sexism. Any breach of these policies was regarded in a serious light and could result in disciplinary action, said Verster.

Alberton Magistrate’s Court.

The bank believed it was inappropriate to draw parallels between a criminal case and a company’s internal disciplinary procedures. Sithole had not been tried in court as he was reported as having claimed. The case had been withdrawn but not dismissed and could be re-instated. There was no question of the bank having overruled the court’s decision as reported.

“Where there is evidence of a crime being committed, the Standard Bank has a duty as a responsible corporate citizen to report it to the police. It is then for the authorities to investigate and for the Attorney-General to decide the appropriate course of action,” Verster said.

The bank believed it was inappropriate to draw parallels between a criminal case and a company’s internal disciplinary procedures.
Insurance out to improve standards

Sudz 26/1193

TRAINING within the business sector varies from industry to industry. For example, educational courses in insurance are either excellent or non-existent.

Most insurance companies are many of the larger brokers provide their staff with in-house training and encourage them to study for international qualifications. But there are other insurance practitioners, who make a living "muddling through".

The Insurance Institute of South Africa (IISA) is an educational body, financially supported by most insurance companies and brokers to provide training and education for all workers at all levels within the industry. The ultimate international insurance qualification is the Fellowship of the Chartered Insurance Institute (FCII) in this United Kingdom, which has now been replaced by the Fellowship of the Insurance Institute of South Africa (FIISA).

This normally takes about five years of part-time study through the FIISA. Study books and notes are provided by the IISA and help is provided by staff at the institute. Other study courses include a basic introduction to insurance, the Certificate of Proficiency and Life Intermediaries Certificate, specialist courses for actuaries and those involved in pension matters, and many more. A certificate is granted on successful completion of each course.

The College of Insurance, at the Institute, holds practical training courses. The training courses cover diverse subjects such as marine, computers, fire, risk management and numerous others. Classes on a wide range of subjects are scheduled throughout the year.

The new Insurance School of Africa is opening at the beginning of April to promote professionalism in insurance. It provides full-time study facilities to enable a graduate who joins the industry to be productive from the first working day.

This will fill a void, as few short-term insurance employers have the financial resources for training and educating new entrants to the insurance market.

The Insurance School, has launched an intensive one-year, full-day AIISA diploma course, one of the programmes of the Insurance Institute of South Africa (IISA), with examinations on a par with world standards.

The diploma's first six examinations will be held at the end of September, with a further three examinations at the end of March 1994.

Having passed all nine examinations, students will automatically qualify for associate membership of the South African Institute. But they will be unable to use the letters AIISA until they have worked for two years in the industry.

The AIISA diploma course costs R9 000, which includes classrooms, workshop and lecture costs. In addition, each student must pay R1 000 to sit the IISA examinations. The Insurance School is at Varsity Place, corner Jan Smuts and Bordeaux avenues, Randburg.
Fired bank executive keeps low profile

Fired Absa executive director Bob Aldworth went to ground yesterday amid speculation about his involvement in R500 000 astray. Internal investigations were under way to determine if greater amounts were involved. Police said no criminal charges were being investigated by Commercial Branch detectives at this stage.

Absa said on Monday that Aldworth's services had been terminated as a result of investigations into certain irregularities.

The affair is highly embarrassing for Absa's CEO, Badenhorst, who appointed Aldworth to manage Allied when it merged with United to form Absa.

Attempts to trace Aldworth, 61, for comment on his dismissal on Monday were unsuccessful. His wife Catherine said from the family home in Craighall that she did not know his whereabouts. "I do not know whether or not he is in Johannesburg or if he will be returning to the city."
Absa hands Aldworth case to police

ABSAC had handed the Bob Aldworth case to the police yesterday afternoon, a commercial branch spokesman confirmed.

Former Absa executive director Aldworth has admitted to taking about R400,000 of the banking group's money which he hoped to repay with profits from share options.

The police spokesman said Absa executives had had discussions with the commercial branch and had made statements but more information was needed before any charge could be formulated. No steps had yet been taken to trace Aldworth nor had the police arrived at a total figure for the amount involved in the alleged fraud.

Absa sources indicated that the amount mentioned in Aldworth's affidavit might not be the final figure as their investigations had not yet been completed.

Since the announcement on Monday that Aldworth was fired, there was speculation that Absa would not press charges if Aldworth found a way to repay the money.

Finance Week took the cudgels for the disgraced bank chief, saying there was "a need to temper justice with mercy". The plea, however, fell on deaf ears. It is understood Absa CEO Piet Badenhorst believes the purge in Absa after the Bankorp takeover would lose credibility if the correct procedures were not followed.

Aldworth put his Craigville home on the market for R1.2m shortly before he was fired. He has not found a buyer yet.
Sanlam names first English speaker as MD

CAPE TOWN — The principle of unbundling companies within the San-korp fold was a sound one and was being investigated by these companies, Sanlam's new chairman, Pierre Steyn, said yesterday.

The naming of former MD Steyn as chairman and of former senior GM: individual assurance Desmond Smith, 45, as MD was made at the AGM yesterday. Smith, an actuary and the first English-speaking MD of Sanlam, has been with the organisation for 25 years.

San-korp CEO and deputy chairman Marinus Daling, 47, has been appointed deputy chairman of Sanlam. The appointments follow the decision by former chairman...

Steyn said San-korp, the investment subsidiary arm of Sanlam, would not be unbundled itself as its role was to monitor the performance of its underlying subsidiaries. Gencor and other companies in the group were looking at the pros and cons of unbundling, Steyn added.

Steyn pointed out that while Sanlam in the past was an exclusively Afrikaans organisation, it now served all South Africans in the middle to upper income groups and would continue along this path. Black policyholders formed a significant proportion of Sanlam's client base and this sector was the fastest growth area.

As the Sanlam board of directors was elected by policyholders, Steyn foresaw that blacks would be elected and that their percentage of managerial staff would increase.

He reiterated Sanlam's policy that investment in housing would be made subject to the guarantee of adequate security and the achievement of an adequate investment return. The assurer would not support subsidising housing, nor would it place money at risk through rental boycotts, he said.

Van den Berg called for a "clean-up" of business by eradicating the lack of business ethics, and for action to be taken against corruption.
Ex-MD told to repay loan

FORMER African Bank MD and CEO Gaby Magomola has been ordered to repay R102,495 he borrowed from his former employees, in terms of a judgment granted against him in the Rand Supreme Court this week.

Judge H Daniels ordered Magomola to pay African Bank R102,495 plus interest of 22% a year from July 2, 1991 to date of payment.

African Bank CC Jacobus Theron said in an affidavit the claim was for outstanding amounts which had been borrowed by Magomola under the bank's staff loan scheme.

Magomola had initially given notice that he intended opposing the application. But when the matter came to court this week the judge was told that Magomola would no longer oppose the application.
News in brief
Soweto 23/2/93
I was misled, says Aldworth

SACKED Amalgamated Banks of South Africa executive director Bob Aldworth says he was misled into signing an affidavit in which he admitted to misappropriating more than R400 000.

In a statement sent to the SABC and passed onto Sopo, Aldworth implied he had been stabbed in the back by his former employers, claiming the affidavit had been dictated by an Absa attorney and given to him to sign "as purely an internal record."
Storm clouds around Absa have not disappeared

Controversy and infighting have plagued the group since its birth, reports the Finance Staff.

MUCH as the controversial chief executive of the giant Absa group Piet Badenhorst (56) would like to avoid it, South Africa’s super banking group with assets exceeding R30 billion, has consistently been in the public spotlight for over three years.

For much of the birth of Absa — the Amalgamated Banks of South Africa, consisting of Volkskas, United, Trust Bank and the Allied — has been accompanied by bitter infighting, litigation, retrenchments and a flight of top bankers from the group.

A number of top bankers have either resigned, taken early retirement or were retrenched in recent months. The latest resignation was that of Piet Liebenberg, previously head of Bankorp, who left the group late last year, a year before his intended retirement date.

At the same time another top executive Hennie Diederichs, who was head of both Volkskas and Trust Bank, resigned to join the Post Office.

Several other senior managers have been retrenched, only to be snapped up by rival banking groups, the latest being Angus Prestice who worked under Aldworth at the Allied.

However, at the weekend it was announced that Absa has employed eight overseas bankers to provide the group with skills in the international banking area.

Badenhorst’s bitter dispute with Kevin de Villiers, the previous MD of Allied, was the focus of a bitter ongoing saga; both the courts and on corporate level.

De Villiers apparently earned Badenhorst’s wrath by publicly opposing United’s offer for Allied, he sided with First National Bank who was also interested in getting control of Allied.

United finally had to increase its offer by nearly R200 million to gain control of the Allied.

Chief executive of Absa... Piet Badenhorst.

In addition Badenhorst has been involved in a number of disputes with various newspapers, magazines and radio stations.

And if allegations made by Aldworth — whom Badenhorst only last year described as “the best banker in South Africa” — are anything to go by, the storm clouds have not disappeared yet. Not for a long while.

A number of senior journalists have been “blacklisted” by Badenhorst for comments they made during the United’s fight for control over Allied Bank in 1990/91.

As chief executive of the United, SA’s largest building society, Badenhorst embarked on a takeover trail in the mid-80s which first included Volkskas, then Allied and last year he also managed to take control of the ailing Bankorp group, the parent company of Trust Bank and Senbank.

Persistent rumours allege that this deal was facilitated with a R1 billion “soft loan” from the Reserve Bank. A spokesman for the Reserve Bank declined to comment.

In spite of all the controversy, banking analysts insist that the super-bank has enormous long-term potential and that if anyone can make the mergers and take-overs work, it will be Badenhorst.

In addition, they say, in order to compete on international markets, South Africa needs large banks with adequate capital to take on the banking giants of the world.
Police move to extradite Aldworth

RAY HARTLEY

POLICE were preparing an application to have dismissed Absa banking executive Bob Aldworth extradited from Britain and brought to trial in SA for the alleged theft of R414 000 from Absa, an Absa spokesman said yesterday.

The spokesman confirmed that charges of blackmail and defeating the ends of justice were also being prepared against Aldworth.

Moves were also being made to sequestrate Aldworth’s SA estate in an effort to recover money allegedly stolen from the group by the former banker, the spokesman said.

The sequestration of assets believed to be in Aldworth’s wife’s name – including his R1.2m house – were being investigated, a banking source said.

Aldworth signed an affidavit admitting to cancelling a personal loan for R414 000 from Absa Bank, but subsequently claimed he had been unaware of the legal consequences of the statement.

Absa lawyers have meanwhile released a transcript of the meeting at which the statement was signed, in which Aldworth said he was aware that he was admitting to theft.
THE Nedcor Staff Society has declared a dispute with Nedcor over the bank's apparent unilateral cancellation of a recognition agreement signed in 1998. The dispute is due to be heard in the industrial court tomorrow.
Union wins order against bank group

SHARON SOROUR, Labour Reporter

The Industrial Court has ordered the Perm to withdraw certain new conditions of service it planned to implement in the Western Cape without the approval of the Financial Institutions Workers' Union.

Union regional organiser Mr Adrian Coetzee said the court case arose after the union urgently applied to the Industrial Court to limit Nedcor Bank from implementing modified conditions of service for their employees regarding disciplinary procedures. The Perm is a division of Nedcor Bank.

Last week, in the ground-breaking ruling, the court ordered that the union be allowed to represent the employees of Nedcor Bank during all stages of the disciplinary process.

"Previously, any employee facing a disciplinary inquiry was entitled to union representation irrespective of the offence or the possible consequences.

"The Perm decided to implement a procedure in the Western Cape whereby trade union representation at disciplinary inquiries would be permitted only if dismissal was the possible consequence."

The court's presiding officer said Nedcor Bank had to negotiate with the union before implementing any new changes to the conditions of service for employees.

A Perm spokesman involved in the case could not be reached for comment.
CONFIDENCE in the ethical standards of SA businessmen was at an all-time low, Cape Supreme Court Judge Pat Tebbutt said at the Ilpa annual congress in Somerset West yesterday.

There had been enough defections from the straight and narrow path in recent years to show that there were numbers of individual businessmen who had sought to depart from the ethical standards expected of them by the public. They had also broken the law in doing so.

"Ethical problems arise when government policies give rise to political or economic uncertainty. The tendency under such circumstances for corruption to flourish, not only among those who administer the country but among those who make their living within the political-economic environment, has manifested itself over the centuries."

Tebbutt said tough economic conditions were also frequently the cause of falling ethical standards. Business often considered it preferable to make a fast buck than no buck at all. Ethical problems also arose when the law was not as clear as it could be. Where loopholes in the law existed, people and organisations frequently slipped through.

In SA the imposition of sanctions had also led to a lowering of ethical standards. "For the country to survive, many firms had to engage in sanctions busting. We know that many overseas firms sold us their goods through intermediaries or under the counter. Nobody can possibly contend that that was honest. However, it was necessary. Ethics gave way to expediency."

"The trouble, however, is that such a concession must not be allowed to extend too far. It must never be allowed to undermine the very structure on which business is based."

Tebbutt said that in any trade-off between ethics and profits, ethics was still generally regarded as good business.

Commenting on the recently formulated Ilpa code of conduct for its fellows, Tebbutt said while such codes were important in providing guidelines for behaviour, they usually were unenforceable. It was difficult to draw the line between what was obviously unethical and what was perceived to be ethical but what was in fact not so — or between what one person regarded as unethical and what another did not.

Vaguely

Most codes of conduct defined the concept which they wished to legislate against too vaguely, if it was capable of definition at all.

"Our law reports abound with cases where voluntary associations have been unable to enforce disciplinary procedures because they have not been clearly defined, or where members against whom disciplinary steps have been taken have had them set aside on review because the aspect they are alleged to have breached has been held to be void for vagueness."

Sanlam addressing staff composition imbalances

SANLAM had relatively more English-speaking and black policy owners than was reflected in its staff composition and it was necessary to address this imbalance which could be detrimental to the standard of service offered. Sanlam chairman Pierre Steyn said at the IIpa conference yesterday.

"More balance is required in our staff composition, but this must not lead to reduced standards of service or quality. The driving force must be to help people to help themselves, and the main areas in which it can take place are in appointments, personnel development and bursary schemes.

"In all Sanlam’s sectors and departments, goals have been agreed upon to address each of the imbalances. When we found we had too few black employees, too few women in management and too few English-speakers, as well as too few males in purely clerical jobs, we formulated goals to be reached in five years and over 10 years.

"The five-year goals were subdivided into departmental goals on a year-by-year basis," Steyn said.

To supplement this programme called the potential activation programme — Sanlam had also addressed the need for more qualified blacks by providing bursary schemes.

"Sanlam has already allocated more than 100 special bursaries to black scholars and technikon and university students, some of whom have completed their studies and are now employed by us. This is in addition to our normal scheme which makes bursaries available on merit to students of all races." Steyn stressed it was imperative for Sanlam to make the appropriate internal changes to keep abreast of the changing environment. These changes relate to changes in business strategy and the composition of its staff.

He also pointed out that Sanlam’s employment policy was not based on ideological or political considerations which ignored the realities of the labor market and solid business principles.

"Nor is it based on tokenism which destroys an employee’s self-respect and credibility and demotivates every individual. It was vital that recruits be faced and developed in real posts and not fictitious or invented ones, Steyn said.
Adhering to code of conduct vital

THE Institute of Life and Pension Advisers (ILPA) has revised its code of conduct to make the standards governing the industry and their implementation more stringent.

Newly elected ILPA president Gerard Ehmké said yesterday that in recent times the financial services industry had received adverse comment from the public regarding the measure of protection afforded the man in the street.

"Earlier this year ILPA published its code of conduct whereby fellows bind themselves to adhering to the highest degree of professionalism and integrity in their dealings with the public. I would earnestly recommend that each fellow reaffirm his commitment to the ideals of ILPA by practising the code of conduct in all dealings in the business world."

Ehmké said the boundaries between the various financial services were gradually blurring and increasing demands were being made by the public for expert advice in the areas of protection for dependents and retirement planning. This trend had been recognised by life insurers in SA and their product ranges had been expanded in recent years to meet these demands.

ILPA's code of conduct requires members to maintain a high level of professional knowledge and skill in order to advise clients in accordance with all the relevant laws, as well as appropriate technical and professional practice and standards.

The code stipulates that in order for an ILPA fellow to maintain his integrity, his client should be made aware of his financial interest in what he is advising him to do. Any fees charged in excess of commission scales had to be fully disclosed.
New president is Fedlife's Gerard Ehmke

FEDLIFE employee benefits deputy GM Gerard Ehmke has been elected president of the Institute of Life and Pension Advisers (Ilpa).

His election was announced at a banquet last night after the institute's annual congress.

Ehmke is an associate of the Chartered Insurance Institute and an Ilpa fellow who has spent about 37 years working in the life assurance industry, first with Southern Life and then with Fedlife, where he is in charge of the sale, administration and marketing of employee benefits.

He replaces AA Life MD Joe Gates, who said in his address that fellows of the institute were important participants in the financial service industry.

Promote

"Our challenge remains to promote a peaceful and certain environment in which we are able to secure consumer expectations in the planning of their personal financial affairs, with certainty and integrity," Gates said.

Ilpa inducted 174 new members, one of the highest numbers recorded in its 11-year existence and a 127% increase in the average pass rate of recent years.

It now has over 1 400 fellows.

Seven prize winners received a total of 10 awards for outstanding performance in the examinations, including Old Mutual's Hendrik Franzen, who was overall winner in the life category and also won prizes for business insurance and estate planning.
Old Mutual to lay off 80

INSURANCE-giant Old Mutual is to retrench 80 employees in its investments department after developing a new investments management system.

However, Old Mutual spokesman Mr. Theo Hartwig says the company is not "in retrenchment mode" and will in fact try to move some of the retrenched staff into other positions.

"Our previous investments management system was not very successful and as a result our administrative staff in that section substantially increased. With our new system about 80 less positions are available," Hartwig said. — Sapa

Education plan about to usher in 'a new era'

THE SA Institute of Valuers is entering a new era of service to its 1 500 members with the implementation of a compulsory programme of continuing professional education.

The programme, which took almost four years to be passed, will operate over a four-year period and members will have to prove that they have undergone a minimum of 24 hours training over that period.

This forms part of the Institute's drive to improve professional standards and to become more acceptable internationally, says chairman Tom Wybenga.

The institute has embarked on a campaign to make the public more aware of the profession and what it has to offer. Greater private participation is needed as most work currently comes from the public sector.

An issue that is also being addressed by the institute is the fact that the valuation of fixed property on many company books is often not undertaken by professional valuers.

Representations are to be made to the Accountants Board, as it is felt this issue needs to be clarified.

The position at present is that directors are legally allowed to value their own fixed properties without calling in a professional valuer.

The institute is calling for a directive in the standard audit procedures to auditors that if the valuation is done by the directors, this must be clearly pointed out to shareholders/policyholders, says Transvaal executive member Rodney Timm.

Assets

In addition, pension fund and life assurance houses are only required to value their assets every three years and do not need to employ a professional valuer, he adds.

Rode Report editor Erwin Rode says the Insurance Act of 1943, which is supposed to police the property valuations of long-term insurers, is "nothing but a dead letter."

The Registrar of Insurance needs simple rules of thumb to judge these property valuations and the Act should be amended to facilitate this and prevent the fudging of property values.

Both a capital gains and land tax are also likely to be introduced in the near future — a move that could boost sagging activity levels in the local valuation industry.

However, the basis for valuing the properties could be problematic, as a number of different systems have been introduced worldwide.

"Transvaal executive member Delene Burman says as property is fundamental to economic activity, everyone needs the services of a valuer at some time for buying, renting, letting, selling or investing in property."

Any individual or company that needs an independent opinion on the value of their property should appoint a valuer to provide an objective, well-researched opinion.

"The institute has been in existence for more than 80 years and while we are proud of what we have achieved in the past, we are continually looking ahead and striving to increase the service we offer to our members, clients and the public," says Wybenga.
Improved training for members

THE SA Institute of Valuers has succeeded in implementing a compulsory programme of continuing professional education for its members, says chairman Tom Wybenga.

"This has been in the pipeline for about four years, but it took time to get this passed as there was some resistance."

The programme will operate in a four-year cycle and, at the end of that period, the members will have to prove that they have undergone a minimum of 24 hours training. Attendances at the Institute's training sessions have been traditionally low - about 10% of its membership - and the aim of the education programme is to improve the professional standards of members by keeping them informed and updated.

"We offer a number of educational sessions such as a four-day career development programme and seminars and workshops," he says.

In the past two years, the valuation industry has raised R160 000 for the development of property valuation courses. The latest R25 000 will be used to develop lecture notes for the property valuation component of the new National Diploma in Real Estate offered by Technikon RSA.

National executive member Delene Burman says the institute provides more than 100 hours of education and encourages members to publish articles in professional magazines or present lectures and talks at seminars and workshops.

Membership stands at about 1 500, which represents roughly 76% of the industry.

"The institute will be holding its annual seminar in Cape Town on June 4. The opening address will be given by Cape Town's city planner Neville Riley, while deputy mayor Clive Reagan will discuss the future of local housing in SA," he says. A number of institute members will also deliver papers, which is part of the continuing education offered to members and non-members alike, he says.

The benefit of belonging to the institute is that members' interests are protected, while disciplinary action can also be taken against members not complying with the code of conduct, Wybenga says.

The standards of the profession have been improved over the years and valuers are becoming increasingly professional. "We have been in existence for more than 80 years and are looking at obtaining more international exposure and recognition. "However, this is problematic as we do not have a specific university degree for the profession while other countries like the UK offer degrees and therefore do not recognise our qualifications," he says.
Banking on his community

Bank of Lisbon MD Durval Marques's rapid fall from grace has left the banking fraternity and Portuguese community stunned.

Marques (59) resigned this month and was immediately arrested on charges of foreign exchange fraud, theft and corruption (Economy & Finance May 21). Particularly intriguing are his alleged dealings with now-deceased millionaire Marino Chiavelli.

"Some R21m could be at stake," says a spokesman for the Attorney-General's office. Marques is free on R150 000 bail but had to surrender his Portuguese passport.

Reputedly earning around R240 000 a year, Marques maintains that his arrest was sparked off by a vendetta against the bank.

Certainly his public image doesn't fit the profile of a criminal.

Known as a tireless champion of numerous charities — he's a founder member of the Academia de Bacalhau, which supports charities internationally, and the Portuguese Welfare Society of SA, otherwise known as Beneficência. Marques has also been instrumental in building an old-age home for Portuguese in Kensington, Johannesburg.

Another home is under construction.

It's not surprising then that the Portuguese community rallied to meet Marques's bail.

MARIUS VAN BLERCK

Taxing tribute

It can't be often that Anglo-American — the epitome of SA's wastepaper sector — supplies the candidate who walks off with the Afrikaanse Handelsinstituut (AH) Junior Corporate Businessman of the Year award.

Marius van Blerck (38), Anglo's group tax consultant, received the accolade from the AHJ's Junior Sakekamer in recognition of his leading role in the management of a large company. Appropriately, he's quite chipper about it: "The award means a lot to me. It also acknowledges some of the peripheral work I do."

Certainly, his range of interests is wide. He is editor of the SA Tax Review, a quarterly journal he founded in 1987. He is also chairman of the scientific committee of the SA Fiscal Association, an independent body that co-operates with the Commissioner of Inland Revenue and influences tax policies.

Van Blerck is clearly well liked and respected.

"He's highly competent," says a colleague at the association. "He attracts large audiences to his lectures because he has things to say that demonstrate unusual depths of new thinking and investigation. In particular, Van Blerck understands and studies world trends in taxation. His thinking is usually well ahead of the field."

He is also the SA correspondent for the Bulletin for International Fiscal Documentation and a member of the Income Tax Special Court. Van Blerck is a keen squash player and also enjoys painting and wildlife.

He holds a BCom and a masters in tax law from Cape Town University, is a CA and former partner of Arthur Andersen, and serves as an examiner at the University of SA and Stellenbosch University. He is the author of the textbook "Mining Tax in SA."

But the book he really wants to write, and which he says, reluctantly, is some years away, is a biography of Denays Reitz, the legendary Anglo-Boer War soldier who later became a Cabinet Minister and wrote the best-seller "Commando," describing his war experiences.

Reitz, says Van Blerck, was to SA then what Chris Hani has become now. "And if we think we're living through turbulent times, we would do well to draw comparisons from conditions that applied then."
Syfret's hit by more resignations

CAPE TOWN — Eight more Syfret's Managed Assets (SMA) staff have resigned to join rival Coronation Asset Management (CAM), bringing the total number of defections over the past week to 16.

The departing group included former SMA MD Leon Campher, leading portfolio managers, researchers and information technology and administrative staff who were approached by Coronation Syndicate to work for its new subsidiary CAM.

Some had already left, while others would leave at the end of June.

The first appointments to fill the gaps left by the eight departed SMA executives were expected to be made next week, Syfret's joint MD Dave Rennie said yesterday.

He said SMA had been approached by many top-level individuals from rival companies and interviews had been held.

All posts would be filled by June 16 but Syfret's would be extremely selective in choosing new people. It would employ only high-calibre people able to work as a team within the Syfret's structure.

Rennie described the departure of the group as a "major disappointment" but said Syfret's had the structural depth and strong, committed remaining staff to overcome the problem.

He said management had started to address the reasons which had prompted the resignations.

"Important as the departing individuals were to Syfret's, the reality is that they were part of a solid organisation comprising researchers, portfolio managers and diverse financial experts — all backed by the most sophisticated computer system operational in any local financial services institution," Rennie said.

Absa forks out millions on staff morale

ABS A yesterday told staff members they would each receive R500 in cash to compensate them for the "trauma" of the past year of rationalisation and bad publicity.

Spokesman Jan Snyman confirmed the banking group had decided to pay out a special bonus to all staff members up to senior management level. "We felt it would be a positive gesture after satisfactory results and a period in which many suffered personal trauma because of all the upheavals." The company would shoulder the tax burden, he said.

Analysts said Absa would pay out about R22m to buy staff morale, which was obviously low in a climate of retrenchments.

The announcement of the special bonuses was made on M-Net's business broadcasting station, which Absa has been using regularly.

CE Piet Badenhorst made the announcement in a live broadcast which could be watched in Absa branches.

Absa's staff numbered 38 738 at the end of the March financial year, compared with 43 714 at the beginning of the year.

The drop of almost 5 000 in staff numbers was split equally between retrenchments and "natural attrition." Absa said 75% of retrenched staff who needed assistance were successfully placed.

... Figures provided with Absa's annual results showed its assets per staff member were among the highest in the sector, while its income per staff member was the lowest of the "big four" banks.
Industry bodies offer improved education service

EDUCATION is the buzzword in property circles and most of the industry’s representative bodies are upgrading and improving this service to members.

The Institute of Estate Agents is committed to offering members and non-members improved education alternatives.

This, in turn, will result in more knowledgeable, efficient and skilled estate agents, which will benefit the public and the broking community.

Munro Donen, chairman of the Commercial and Industrial Brokers Association — a division of the institute’s southern Transvaal branch with 300 members — says the association is committed to providing a better service to commercial and industrial brokers.

“This will include providing ongoing education for our members. In the past we have been called elitists for offering our facilities only to members. Non-members will now also be welcome to attend our courses and make use of the services we offer,” he says.

The need for continued education has become more important in light of the recent decision by the Estate Agents Board to do away with the compulsory exam for estate agents.

Course

The institute, in conjunction with the business economics department at Wits University, has introduced a three-day property course covering aspects of the commercial and industrial property market.

The course will also be covered in evening classes over three weeks. Successful candidates will be awarded the Certificate of Commercial and Industrial Specialists.

“Other courses are offered in conjunction with the National Property Academy. The institute is currently considering a system whereby members will have to undergo some ongoing education before being awarded an approved designation that will separate them from those who have not,” Donen says.

Institute members are not only bound by the stringent Estate Agents Board code of conduct, but also by the institute’s own internal code, which goes a step further in trying to protect the public and the industry.

“We are also attempting to create a better relationship with the board and are already working together on some projects. The board is there to protect the consumer and the institute to assist the broker so there is no reason why we should not work together,” Donen says.

Effect

“Deregulation will also have an effect on our industry and the time may come when the two bodies are merged,” he says.

While the board recently decided to scrap the compulsory exam, it says it cannot overemphasise the value of undergoing a formal education course.

Chairman Estel Jawitz says the board will continue to urge all candidate estate agents with the “necessary degree of aptitude and background” to undertake a board exam course and write the exam.

“As an added incentive, the board is to introduce an approved designation for those who have already passed a board exam, as well as those who intend doing so in the future,” says Jawitz.

Extended

The SA Property Owners Association (Sapoa) has also extended its education programme for members by introducing a proactive education programme to encourage underprivileged communities to participate in the industry.

“The intention is to allow these students who excel to be introduced to our members to enable them to gain practical experience and become actively involved in the industry,” says executive director Brian Kirchmann.

Sapoa has been a major supporter and funder of the three-year National Diploma in Real Estate course run by Technikon RSA.
NBS Holdings retrenched 400 staff members during its 1993 financial year in a restructuring process which cost the group R5.5m in retrenchment costs and fees paid to the external consultants that engineered the process.

In the group's annual report, CE John Gafney said a large number of staff took up the voluntary retrenchment package and the number of forced retrenchments was kept to an absolute minimum.

The cost of the restructuring process had been written off in full in the 1993 financial year.

Chairman Brian McCarthy expected the restructuring undertaken during the financial year, as well as the new investments, to result in "meaningful real growth" in earnings this financial year.

The group restructured and streamlined its largest division, the Bank Division, and McCarthy said this had had a major impact on its cost base, the benefits of which would be felt for some time to come.

Gafney said for the first time NBS had to undergo a major retrenchment exercise following an in-depth study of the group's business processes and a refocus on the most profitable areas of business.

SHARON WOOD

During the year under review, the group continued to increase its unfunded income to counter cost inflation and its dependence on the interest margin. Unfunded income now contributed about 21% to NBS Bank's total income, McCarthy said.

The proportion of insurance business in the group's activity grew further with the recent acquisition of a 50% holding in Aegis Insurance Company. McCarthy anticipated that direct and indirect insurance activities would contribute a "highly satisfactory" 35% of the group's income during the current financial year.

Insurance comprised of 19.2% of the group's earnings during 1993, compared with 18.8% the previous year. Banking's contribution increased to 59.9% from 53%.

NBS Bank's capital adequacy ratio remained below the required 8% level effective from March 31 1992.

But Gafney stressed that the group had sufficient capital to inject into the bank to meet the requirement. He said: "It has proved more beneficial to hold excess capital in other companies and the bank will only be recapitalised when necessary."
Two sectors employ more

GERALD REILL

PRETORIA — The insurance and manufacturing industries are the only significant sectors showing employment growth, Central Statistical Service (CSS) figures released yesterday show.

At the end of the first quarter of this year, 70,684 workers were employed by insurance companies from 68,468 the same time last year.

Between September and December last year, employment in manufacturing increased by 7,300 to 1,39 million from the same four months the year before.

Banks and building societies employed 121,000 at the end of March compared with 124,644 a year before.

The total number of people employed by banks, building societies and insurance companies rose to 191,764 in the first quarter against 192,112 at end-March last year.

The figures also showed mining and quarrying shed nearly 20,000 workers to 576,286 in the four months to end-December last year. The construction sector lost 8,000 workers, bringing the force down to 337,000.

Economists said the marginal increase in insurance and manufacturing employment did not indicate a trend. Employment was likely to shrink over the rest of this year.

Other CSS figures released yesterday showed a marginal increase in expected wholesale trade sales in the three months to end-May.

In the three months, at constant 1990 prices, sales rose 0.7% to R26,91bn. At current prices, sales increased 0.9% to R25,748bn.
Vendome offers a place for luxury by the Rupert family of South Africa, has spent a great deal of time working on its complex group structure by splitting off the tobacco arm, Rothmans International, and combining the two luxury goods businesses, Luxco and Dunhill Holdings, into Vendome.

Dunhill is at present a 67 per cent owned subsidiary of Rothmans.

Shareholders

Shareholders in Rothmans and Dunhill Holdings are being offered cash and shares in the new tobacco and luxury goods companies.

Richemont said the new structure would lead to savings and improved marketing. “We are trying to get the operational structure to reflect operational necessities,” said Johann Rupert, the chairman of the group.

The restructuring will also bring to an end Dunhill Holdings’ life as a publicly listed company. The company, which was set up by Alfred Dunhill exactly 100 years ago, was listed on the London Stock Exchange in 1923. Lord Douro, Dunhill’s chairman, said Vendome’s individual brands would continue to be managed separately and the disappearance of Dunhill’s listing was not significant.

“We believe Vendome is one of the most distinguished group of brand names,” he said, “It would be impossible to buy more than that.”

The new company is named after Paris’ upmarket Place Vendome.

Piet Liebenberg joins Cosab

One of South Africa’s best-known bankers, Piet Liebenberg, has been appointed chief executive of the Council of Southern African Bankers (Cosab). The new appointment is effective from July 1.

Commenting on the appointment of his namesake, the chairman of Cosab, Chris Liebenberg, said that the Council was delighted and fortunate to obtain his services.

“Piet’s exposure to the different fields of banking, and his knowledge of the economy, will stand Cosab in good stead,” Piet Liebenberg succeeds Tony Norton who left Cosab recently. He will retain his non-executive chairmanship of Biblionet, a project of the Bible Society of South Africa.

Property

firm clinches first ‘unit’ deal

The current deal involves the issue of 5230000 new units, worth R15.5 million, and the placement of these with a number of institutions in order to give Anglo-Dutch the cash.

JHJ (Transvaal) property management director Markham Becker says the new system will allow PUTs to compete on an equal footing with variable loan stock companies or direct buyers and that other funds are expected to follow Capital’s lead.

He says that using scrip for acquisitions will also eliminate the discount to market value in issuing new units which was necessitated by a rights issue, and which worked to the disadvantage of existing unit holders who tended not to follow their rights.

by the unit trust advisory committee last year, allow the PUTs to issue units directly to vendors of property, rather than holding a rights issue to raise cash for the purchase.

Capital, managed by the JHI Isaacs group, has already used the new system to buy an industrial property from Anglo-Dutch, and says two more such deals are in the pipeline.

The unit trust advisor committee, as well as the unit trust managers, will be monitored by the unit trust service board.
Union seeks to stem job losses

BY PAUL BELL
LABOUR CORRESPONDENT

The Banking, Insurance, Finance and Assurance Workers' Union (Bifawu) estimates that up to 1,000 workers have been retrenched from banking and financial institutions in the past three months, and is planning a campaign against these job losses.

National organiser Stan Sigotyla says the estimate, which includes 250 union members, is based on the union's own research of the period June to August. Bifawu, which has about 3,000 members, most of them clerks, drivers, messengers and cleaners — will meet at the Duman Hall in central Johannesburg at 1 pm today to launch its campaign.

In a statement, Bifawu president Ramontsho Monnakgotla said the most common reasons for retrenchments were mergers, takeovers, rationalisation and restructuring as a result of the acquisition of new technology.

He called for an end to retrenchments and the employment of casual and temporary staff, and for the retraining of workers to equip them for other tasks.
Bank union hits out

INGRID SALGADO

THE 5,000-strong Banking, Insurance, Finance and Assurance Workers' Union yesterday slammed its members' employers and the Black Management Forum (BMF) for using affirmative action to advance their own "parochial" interests.

"Affirmative action should be reaching the downtrodden," the BMF and our members' management should do it the other way around," union general secretary Tom Phalama said after the Nactu-affiliated trade union's weekend national council meeting.

"The union is at the view that affirmative action must be from below." The tendency to recruit black directors whimsically, even those with discredited credentials, must be desisted from.

Urging the forum to consult the union in reviewing its guidelines on affirmative action policies, Phalama said current policies were not reaching the right people.
ABOUT 1 000 employees at Mutual and Federal Insurance have petitioned management demanding better salaries and that the company’s system of assessing performance be abolished.

The workers, who are members of the Banking, Insurance, Finance and Assurance Workers’ Union, maintain that they are being paid a “pittance under the performance appraisal system”.

Bifawo official Mr Mfundo Nhlapo said the main grievances concerned:

- The scrapping of the component increase; and
- That the performance appraisal system should not be linked with salary increases.

He said: “We submit that the merit component has always placed our members at a disadvantage because they are at the mercy of the verkrampte line managers of the organisation.

“We find the company’s claim that it evaluated the position of each employee to determine whether they should receive increases in pay based on merit to be misleading.”

He said the workers were demanding the following:

- A R600 across-the-board salary increase to be effective as from December 1; and
- To train workers in certain areas so that they should improve themselves as far as performance is concerned.

A company spokesman said management had received the petition and that it was studying the union’s demands.
Union to fight lay-offs

By Ike Motsapi

THE Banking, Insurance, Finance and Assurance Workers Union is to launch a campaign against retrenchments next month.

The campaign, starting at the end of January, is aimed at getting employers to halt retrenchments.

Bifawa general secretary Mr Isiy Phalama said: "The national council of Bifawa believes that retrenchments cannot be undertaken unilaterally by employers.

"The council deplores the racist and inconsistent manner in which retrenchments have been undertaken in the industry.

"We feel that they are being used by racist and conservative managements in the industry as a weapon to dismiss our members."

Phalama said Bifawa accepted affirmative action in principle but said that the union was perturbed by the way this concept was being used by bosses.

"Bifawa is thus of the view that affirmative action must be from below and take account of deprivation at the shop floor.

"The tendency to recruit black directors, even those with discredited credentials, must be destined," Phalama said.

Wage strike looms after Santam mediation fails

SHARON SOROUR
Labour Reporter

A WAGE strike is looming in the short-term insurance industry after mediation failed to secure an agreement between Santam Insurance and Sasbo, the largest independent financial union in South Africa.

Society of Bank Officials assistant general secretary Piet Heymans said employees would be balloted for strike action this week and "limited industrial action" would take place.

"Most of our members at Santam indicated they are prepared to take part in industrial action, including a picket at Santam head office," Mr Heymans said.

Negotiations between the 54,000-strong union and the company ended in deadlock on Friday after mediation by the Independent Mediation Service of South Africa (IMSSA) failed.

Mr Heymans said that although the parties had adjusted their final demands and offers "in an effort to secure an agreement", settlement was not reached.

He said: "We lowered our final demand from 10 percent to 8.5 percent (a month on the salary package), while Santam increased its final offer from 8 percent to 8.5 percent."

Santam also extended group life and disability cover to married women and unmarried employees with dependants, but Mr Heymans said although Sasbo appreciated the move "our members want cash in their pockets".

Now it's bankers in bermudas

SAAMBOU Bank, which probably more than any other South African financial institution has typified the conservative image of bankers, has made a break with tradition with the introduction of less formal clothing for its male staff.

They are now no longer required to wear either a tie or jacket.

Instead they can wear either a stripped light blue or burgundy shirt, which is available with both long and short sleeves, with charcoal trousers.

It also places the male staff of the Pretoria-based bank on an equal footing with its women staff, who have worn corporate clothing for about the past 30 years.

A new addition to the corporate clothing for women staff are navy bermuda shorts as an alternative to a skirt or dress in the bank's corporate colours.

The new corporate clothing for male staff was introduced at branches countrywide recently.

Saambou Bank senior manager communication and public relations Johan Geertsema said its introduction was part of Saambou's strategy to be the banker for the salaried worker and individual — and to be the friendship bank.

The idea is to provide less formal banking and to be a low cost provider of financial services.

We are breaking new ground and getting away from the image of a dark suit and white shirt, he said.

Mr Geertsema said the corporate clothing was voluntary and staff could decide for themselves whether to wear a tie.

"The staff love it and most have chosen not to wear a tie. The introduction of the male corporate clothing also coincides and correlates with the interior of our banking halls, which are in the process of being upgraded.

"The upgrading, which is spread over three financial years, started about 18 months ago and will be completed in the next year.

"Sixty of our about 80 branches have already been upgraded."

"This programme is aimed at projecting and enhancing the image of a friendly bank and branches are decorated in light friendly colours."

"The counters are also not in traditional straight lines and this contributes to a convivial and friendly atmosphere for clients," he said.
Insurance strike ballot — by mail

Labour Reporter

FINANCIAL union Sasbo has posted 1 300 ballot papers to its members at short-term insurer Santam Insurance amid threats of a nationwide strike.

SA Society of Bank Officials assistant general secretary Piet Heymans said ballot papers had been sent in bulk mail and the union expected replies in the next 10 days.

"We are conducting the strike via a postal vote and members will return their ballot papers to the union in a prepaid envelope."

Mr Heymans said if the workers decided to go on strike, they would make history in the short-term insurance industry.

He said it was also the first time in the union's history that it had declared a dispute three weeks after signing a recognition agreement with a company.

Sasbo represented 1 300 of the 2,000 employees in the bargaining unit.

The majority of Sasbo members are in the Western Cape. Santam's head office is in Cape Town.
Strike ballot at Santam

By Ike Motsapi

MEMBERS of the 54 000 strong South African Society of Bank Officials employed by Santam Bank will hold a strike ballot after mediation failed to resolve a wage dispute yesterday.

Sasbo members said they would stage lunch-hour pickets outside the head office of Santam in Cape Town.

The assistant general secretary of Sasbo, Mr Piet Heymans, said the strike ballot would be held on March 28 if management had not responded favourably to their demands.

"The pickets and demonstrations will spread to other Santam offices throughout the country as a build-up to the strike ballot on March 28," said Heymans.

Heymans said Sasbo demanded salary adjustments of between 9.5 to 10 percent while management made a final offer of between 8 and 8.5 percent.

Santam's management spokesman would not comment "because talks with the union were still under way."

100 lose jobs at loans firm

R2-m DEBT Trouble at co-op to lend money to disadvantaged people:

By Ruth Bhengu

Over 100 employees of Metropolitan Housing Finance Co-operative have been laid off because the company is in financial difficulties. The workers have been staging a sit-in at the offices of Metco's main creditor, the Independent Development Trust Finance Corporation.

They have accused the IDTFC of "unilateral restructuring" of their company and reducing it to a debt collecting agent.

The IDTFC's spokesman, Mr Frans Pretorius, dismissed the claims as untrue. He said his company which had acted "purely as a financier had become a manager" at the request of Metco's directors after its managing director, Mr Ben Peters, was asked to resign.

He said the IDTFC was called in to "scale down the activities of the company so that it could survive".

"This was decided by Metco's board of directors at a meeting. They gave IDTFC the authority to implement a programme to restructure the company.

"This included cutting down staff members whose numbers were in excess. The other option was liquidation," he said.

Pretorius said Metco would have to retrench between 100 and 110 employees.

"We have agreed to pay an additional R700 000 in a gratuity settlement," he said.

Pretorius said Metco had used R22 million of the R28 million put up by the IDTFC.

It was in arrears to the tune of R2 million.

"Metco fell into arrears because they were unable to collect their debt," he said.

Spokesman for Metco's board of directors Jumis Lekgetho confirmed that the IDTFC was acting on Metco's instructions.

Metco was established in 1992 to lend money to disadvantaged people who could not raise loans from banks.

It was financed by the Independent Development Trust Finance Co-operation to the tune of R28 million.

Metco's annual general meeting will be held at its Vereeniging offices on Saturday.
Banks oppose bid to outlaw racial bias

MOST of SA’s major banking groups have responded sharply to reports that government is preparing legislation which, if enacted, could outlaw the practice of race bias in banking.

Banks today said that, contrary to claims by various groups, including the Anti-Discrimination Board, the practice was not discriminatory. They said that, in fact, it was a necessary practice to ensure that credit was available to all creditworthy individuals.

Most banks said that, while it was probably nominally correct that most banks were not discriminatory, in practice it was the opposite. They said that the opposition had been knowing all along that the banks were not discriminatory and did not require the enactment of legislation.

He said that the proposed legislation was similar to that existing in countries such as Singapore and Malaysia, where banks had been in line with the international constitution. It would be used to prove whether banks were unbiased in the allocation of credit, and would facilitate the extension of loans key to equitable development.

Morrison said banks in other countries, while at first sceptical about such legislation, had eventually found it a useful marketing tool to advertise the social responsibility programmes to the community.

Responding to the banks’ argument that the proposed Act would cause operational difficulties, Morrison said this was obviously going to be investigated. He said that the discussion of the banking community and other interested parties would find ways of promoting creditworthy candidates at the least possible cost. At the appropriate moment, we would look forward to receiving the legislation.

He said that the system would not necessarily require additional bureaucrats to implement and manage it. The relevant state agency could assume responsibility.

'Administrative nightmare' danger

MOST of SA’s major banking groups have responded sharply to reports that government is preparing legislation which, if enacted, could outlaw the practice of race bias in banking.

Bankers said plans to force banks to disclose details of loans and deposits would be an administrative nightmare, and would be a morally retrogressive step.

ANC banking and finance spokesman Neil Morrison said at the weekend that the ANC had appointed a committee to begin drafting appropriate legislation.

It would require banks to report their loans by race and sex, while assets and liabilities would have to be outlined by sub-region and sector. In addition, the race and sex of staff and the location of branches and defaults would have to be listed by neighborhood.

Association of Mortgage Lenders executive director Martin Milburn-Pyle said most major banks had “deracialised” their loan books when the Population Registration and Group Areas Acts were abolished several years ago. “This means it would be exceedingly difficult to report what the race of a particular homeower was. It would require a major data gathering operation which in itself is costly.”

First National Bank banking GM Bob Wood said the group had long had a policy whereby it did not view race and sex as criteria for lending.

“All our customers are assessed according to identical lending and risk-assessment criteria. For years we have promoted race and gender equality in the SA workplace, and have these records available as they are key to the management of our diversity management programme. “But it is difficult to make definitive statements about a document we have not yet been able to scrutinise and we look forward to receiving this.”

Wood said it was crucial that nothing compromised the confidentiality between banker and customer.

An Absa spokesman said such legislation would cause unnecessary delays in the processing of approvals, resulting in additional costs. There would be a need for greater client detail. Additional bureaucrats would be required to implement and manage such a system.

“As with any change in legislation we would like to be part of the process, but at the outset it does not sound desirable.”

Standard Bank chairman Conrad Strauss said in the group’s 1993 annual report that government proposals for regulation of the banking sector contained some disturbing features.

“The implicit requirement to classify transactions on a racial basis is, in my view, morally retrogressive and the operational implications of compliance would be formidable indeed,” he said.

Morrison yesterday questioned the banks’ negative reaction to the proposed legislation. “If the banks have nothing to hide, what would they have to fear from the new Act?”

He rejected the claim that requesting race and sex classification of loans and mortgages was morally retrogressive.

Bank union may link with Cosatu

JOHANNESBURG. — Cosatu's attempt to gain a foothold in white-collar unions is expected to be boosted later this year with the SA Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo) expected to leave the Federation of SA Labour Unions (Fedsal) and affiliate to Cosatu.

Sasbo assistant general secretary Mr Donald Graham said the decision had been taken in principle and it was "now a matter of selling it to the membership". He hoped this would occur prior to Cosatu's next congress scheduled for September.

The only obstacle he could foresee was Cosatu's alliance with the ANC, which was viewed with concern by some factions within Sasbo.

Mr Graham said Sasbo would incorporate about 4 000 SA Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers' Union (Sacawu) members in the sector.

Sasbo currently had about 60 000 members and was looking at the possibility of merging with fellow Fedsal affiliate, the Financial Institutions Workers' Union, which has about 20 000 members.

Union analysts said Sasbo was not the only Fedsal affiliate talking to Cosatu, with both the SA Broadcasting Staff Association, which represents the majority of SABC workers, and the Transnet Salaried Staff Union exploring the same option.
Insurance staff in wage dispute

By Russel Molefe

BLACK employees at Aegis insurance company in Johannesburg have been picketing during lunch hours for the past two weeks following a wage dispute with management. The workers — who include supervisors, insurance underwriters and filing clerks — are members of the South African Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers Union. They are demanding a 28 percent wage increase. The company is offering eight percent.

Aegis executive manager for industrial relations, Mr Dave Doehin, said picketing workers represented a small percentage of the 600 workers.
R20m on loan for electrification

Johannes Ngobobo

The Development Bank of Southern Africa had given a R20m loan to the KaNgwane Electricity Supply Corporation to electrify 13,000 homes in the Eastern Transvaal this year in line with the reconstruction and development programme, the Eastern Transvaal government said yesterday.

Premier Mathew Phosa said studies had shown the 61% of households not electrified were in the former KaNgwane homeland, and this demanded an accelerated electrification drive.

Areas targeted included about 3,900 households in Nkazeni North, 3,400 in Nkazeni South, 3,500 in Nkomazi and 2,500 households in Mawati/Milodzi.

Meanwhile, the German agency for technical cooperation had donated R500,000 to the Eastern Transvaal administration for job training.

Phosa said the various heads of department had been entrusted with the responsibility of nominating potential trainees for secretarial, administrative and book-keeping courses.

He said the agency would bring an expert in intergovernmental relationships to visit the province.

Phosa said the agency would finance research into the structure and functions of the premier's office in SA as well as in the international context.

‘Posts, not jobs, guaranteed’

Jacqui Golding

Project in the UK as a partnership between the private and public sectors and non-governmental organisations, has now been officially located in SA. Project manager Thuthu Radebe said it was aimed at local black graduates and those who had opted to use their skills abroad.

"Windows on Work intends to arm black graduates with the necessary skills to fill posts locally," Radebe said.

Companies could pay R30,000 contribution which allowed them access to Windows on Work's database which listed black graduate job seekers and names of black candidates with specific skills.

PUBLIC Service and Administration Minister Zola Skweyiya said yesterday the jobs of white public servants were guaranteed, but that their posts were not.

Speaking at the launch of the SA Advanced Education Project — Windows on Work — Skweyiya said there were 11,000 vacancies within the public service.

"Through Windows on Work we hope to put blacks and women in these positions," he said, adding that the education project's launch came at an opportune time.

Skweyiya said the task of his ministry was to ensure that competition between white and black applicants thrived.

Johannesburg - Banking and insurance workers say today they would start nationwide protests and demonstrations to back demands for higher pay.

Banking, Insurance, Finance and Assurance Workers Union (BIFAWU) general secretary Tom Phalala said the 9,000-member union would take to the streets next week to protest against low salaries and pending retrenchments.

"We are taking to the streets so that the public is aware that all is not well in the banking and insurance industry," he said. — Reuter.
Electricity fee hike ‘preferred to levy’

INDUSTRY favoured higher electricity tariffs instead of a national electrification levy to fund the reconstruction and development programme’s (RDP) electrification programme, National Electrification Forum secretary member Hendrik Barnard said yesterday.

Barnard said the levy had been rejected as a way of funding the programme but that “big users” of electricity industry accepted that tariffs would have to rise.

Barnard said forum’s management committee still had to finalise its proposals on the financing of the electrification scheme, and these would be submitted to government next month.

The RDP target was to make 500,000 new connections a year for the next five years.

Instead of an electrification levy, the targets would have to be subsidised by all the national distributors, he said.

Small local government authorities had access to funding for electrification schemes, much of which would be provided by the Development Bank.

It was also suggested that local authorities scrap subsidies to high domestic users to reduce the tariff hike to industrial and commercial users.

There was general acceptance that “big customers” would have to foot the bill for some of the schemes, but the rejection of the levy meant that the forum would be asking government to help fund the rural electrification scheme.

It was suggested that distributors would finance the electrification schemes for up to about R2,500 a connection. Connections in rural areas sometimes cost at least R3,500 which meant at least an extra R250m was needed.

The establishment of a funding mechanism would reduce the cost of capital for the scheme.

He said there was little point in pursuing foreign loans as these were almost as expensive as borrowing on the local capital market. Foreign grants were scarce and there had not been any of substance.

Financial institutions face mass action

BY JOVIAL RANTAO
LABOUR CORRESPONDENT

A general strike has been threatened at banks, building societies and insurance companies in the PWV by a trade union which has embarked on a campaign for, among other things, recognition, higher wages and an end to retrenchments.

Banks in Johannesburg and other areas might be forced to close on Saturday when the Banking, Insurance, Finance and Assurance Workers' Union (Bifawu) stages a march as part of its "season for action".

At the march, memoranda are due to be handed to financial institutions. Employers would be given 30 days to respond favourably to the demands, failing which Bifawu would call for a general strike.

"The finance industry must brace itself for a period of unprecedented mass action."

"Given the nature of the industry, this action will result in the complete paralysis of the economy," Bifawu general secretary Tom Phalana said yesterday.

Demands listed in the memoranda which will be presented on Saturday include:

- An end to retrenchments.
- Establishment of a worker-controlled provident fund.
- Withdrawal of "discriminatory" performance appraisals.
- An accelerated training programme for affirmative action.
- Adjustments for a living wage.
- Job security.
- Recognition of Bifawu.
THE Banking, Insurance, Finance and Assurance Workers' Union yesterday informed the finance industry it would call a general strike next month if retrenchments and low wages in the industry did not end.

Bifawa general secretary Tom Phalama said more than 6,000 union members would march in central Johannesburg on Saturday to deliver a list of grievances to First National Bank, Mutual & Federal, Standard Bank and Absa. Employer bodies representing sectional interests would also be asked to receive the memorandum, which would call for a 'worker-controlled' provident fund, withdrawal of a performance appraisal scheme, affirmative action, and union recognition.

If the demands were not accepted within 30 days, the finance industry should brace itself for mass action over the festive season, which would "result in complete paralysis of the economy", Phalama said.
Finance union warns of ‘season of action’

JOHANNESBURG. — Unionised workers in the financial sector on Saturday gave employers 30 days to respond to demands for improved work conditions and a stop to retrenchments.

The Banking, Insurance, Finance and Assurance Workers’ Union (Bifawu) said in a statement coinciding with its “season of action” that it would embark on mass action over the festive season if employers continued to ignore its demands.

Bifawu general secretary Mr Tom Phalama said that given the nature of the financial sector, “this action will result in complete paralysis of the economy”. (59)CT/9/94

3 000 in protest

THE SA Commercial Catering and Allied Workers Union yesterday marched on First National Bank's headquarters in Johannesburg in protest against the bank's refusal to negotiate with the union.

The march, which attracted 3 000 workers, started at the union's headquarters in Nugget Street and wound its way to the Johannesburg Stock Exchange. Officials of the union said the march on the JSB was meant to show that "financial institutions were not willing to negotiate with unions".

The union claimed that FNB had "blatantly" refused to give them recognition. FNB management yesterday said it would respond to a demand for countrywide recognition of the union by 2pm today. A Sacawu official said the union would consider striking if the dispute was not resolved.

Ballots would be held even though the union had been refused access to bank facilities — in spite of a conciliation board recommendation last month.

Negotiations on union recognition deadlocked. Sacawu has claimed that membership of the "sweetheart" union Sasbo was a condition of employment.
Bank will respond to union demand today

JOHANNESBURG. — First National Bank management said yesterday it would respond by 2pm today to a demand for countrywide recognition of the SA Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers' Union.

Saccawu members marched in the city centre yesterday.

The marchers handed a list of demands to managers at the bank's head offices and to Mr Roy Gardner of the stock exchange. CT 23/9/94.

Saccawu accuses Standard

THE SA Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers' Union (Saccawu) yest-derday accused the Standard Bank of refusing to recognise the union in the former Bophuthatswana because of its "narrow economic interests".

Saccawu said workers had been on strike for three weeks at the bank's Bophuthatswana operation, Stanbo, mainly over recognition.

Negotiations broke down last week when the bank refused to discuss the issue further until workers returned to their jobs.

However, Saccawu believed an instruction had been issued by Standard Bank SA (SBSA) not to recognise the union as this would have a negative effect on the bank's agreement with Sasbo, the finance union.

"Saccawu is convinced that the current industrial action is being prolonged unnecessarily by SBSA so as to achieve its narrow economic interest — namely to take over Stanbo at a devaluated share value, which in our view will not be in the interest of our members and the people of the Northwest province."

Saccawu called on customers, shareholders and the provincial government to exert pressure on the bank. It also called on the bank to withdraw ultimatums to members, and threats of dismissal.

Standard Bank said it would only be in a position to respond to these allegations today.
Union says Sanlam is ‘racist’

Ultimatum to insurance giant

They were complaining about race issues, bad working conditions and lack of respect. They said the company had a "litigation mentality" and that their demands were being ignored.

The chairman of the Sanlam Employees Union, Mr. Christiaan, said the company had a "litigation mentality" and that their demands were being ignored.

The union had the support of its members and the company was "constituted with the support of the majority of black workers," he said.

The union members have been demanding better pay and conditions for their fellows.

Mr. Botha said claims of racial disparity were exaggerated. The company was committed to implementing affirmative action policies to address the issue.
Work stoppage looms at FNB, says union

LABOUR CORRESPONDENT.

A national strike looms at First National Bank branches around country, where the South African Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers Union (Saccawu) says it is conducting strike ballots because of the bank's alleged refusal to recognise the union.

The union said it would know the outcome of the ballot by its 12,000 members by the end of the week.

Saccawu media officer Sithembele Tahwete said: “We have substantial membership at the bank’s branches and we should enjoy rights accorded to other employee organisations.”

He said Saccawu members were experiencing problems taking part in the ballot as some FNB managers refused to give them time off.

Tahwete said Saccawu members would embark on a strike as soon as results with a majority “yes” for industrial action were received.

However, Louis Moll, head of industrial relations at FNB, said he was unaware of any balloting except for two branches in the Transvaal.

Moll said the bank had held extensive discussions with Saccawu on a number of issues, including recognition.

“FNB accepted Saccawu’s offer to validate its right to recognition by supplying us with the details of membership of the union of FNB staff, but to date no such details have been supplied to FNB,” Moll said, questioning the strength of Saccawu membership at the bank.
Finance workers urged to join union

and MQLIS NGKASHI
Weekend Argus Reporters

FINANCE industry workers have been told by union bosses that only by joining a union and striking could they get employers to listen to their demands and improve working conditions.

Speaking at a Banking, Insurance, Finance and Assurance Workers' Union (Bifaw) meeting at the City Hall yesterday, union president Lucky Mmonakgotla told over 300 workers the industry had been rocked by a recent spate of retrenchments due to companies restructuring and acquiring modern technology.

Bifawu, an affiliate of the National Council of Trade Unions, was formed in the PWV region about 10 years ago, but does not have a branch in Cape Town.

The meeting was the second attempt by the union to launch a branch here.

Mr Mmonakgotla said: "Companies' profit margins continue to increase and the shareholders' dividends increase — only the workers suffer.

Management in the finance, banking and insurance industry was not showing any commitment to avoiding retrenchments by training workers to adjust to modern technology.

He said Bifawu was intensifying its September 1993 campaign to highlight these problems among its members and other workers in the industry.

"Use of modern technology was often planned and implemented by management without any input from the workers."

"In deciding to retrench, they do not even think of the implications their actions will have on the lives of the work force."

Mr Mmonakgotla said Bifawu had concluded that the industry was not committed to sustaining job security and did little to avoid job losses. It was more concerned with making profits at the expense of workers' rights.

He said the union, which had entered only for black workers in the industry until last year, was now making serious inroads among white workers who, since the end of apartheid, had realised their fate was inextricably linked to that of black workers.

"Our plan is to continue negotiating with bosses about problems, but if they continue ignoring our reasonable requests we will be left with no option but to go on nationwide strike," said Mr Mmonakgotla.
Surge in black workers at banks

SAMANTHA SHARPE

A SURGE in the number of blacks employed in the financial services sector helped lift the sector's employment level to a five-year high of 194 266 in September, compared with 192 672 at the same time last year, Central Statistical Service (CSS) figures released yesterday showed.

Economists said affirmative action policies among banks, building societies and insurance companies were the major factors spurring the 14.3% rise in the number of black workers to 31 140.

The CSS said that while the number of Asian and coloured workers had increased 4.8% and 2.9% respectively, the number of white workers had fallen almost 3% to 129 123.

The statistics were also a sign that the economic recovery was starting to have a positive effect on the job market, economists said. They noted that the financial sector had been remarkably resilient during the recession, creating employment while other sectors were shedding jobs.

The buoyant job situation in the financial sector remained in place despite rationalisation among the big banking groups. Economists linked the phenomenon to the sector's strength.

Other sectors, too, are showing signs of a tentative recovery in employment.

A Bureau of Economic Research survey released this week showed the first net increase in factory employment in the third quarter since the last upswing. Factory retrenchments had reached their peak at the end of 1992.

The mining sector has reported a leveling-off of its employment situation after a downward spiral during the past few years, but a turnaround in the gold mining industry is not yet in sight.

Latest Chamber of Mines figures showed a marginal fall in the number of gold miners employed in the third quarter compared with the first and second quarters.

Chamber members, excluding contractors, employed 356 571 workers in September compared with 357 110 in March.

However, chamber-economist, Roger Baxter said coal mining members reported a rise to 27 404 workers in the third quarter compared with 26 033 in the first.
Ex-activist heads economic council

FORMER trade unionist and community activist Mr Jayandra Naidoo has been appointed executive director of the National Economic, Development and Labour Council (Nedlac), Labour Minister Mr Tito Mbeweni announced yesterday.

Mr Mbeweni also announced Ms Debra Marsden, head of the National Economic Forum secretariat, had been appointed programmes director of Nedlac.

Nedlac will be launched in February.

Born in Durban, Mr Naidoo, 34, studied law at the University of Durban Westville and was active in the SA Students Organisation (Saso) before it was banned by the apartheid government.

Between 1987 and 1990 Mr Naidoo was education secretary of the SA Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers' Union, and a central executive committee member of the Congress of SA Trade Unions.

Ms Marsden, who was born in Krugersdorp, studied economics at UCT, from which she holds an honours degree.

She lectured at Khanya College and did research at the Labour Research Service before joining the Consultative Business Movement in 1990. — Sapa
Major coup for Cosatu if bankers’ union joins

COSATU views the application for affiliation from the 7,500-member South African Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo) as "extremely important."

But any affiliation to South Africa’s predominantly white financial sector trade union Sasbo to the ANC-aligned union federation Cosatu is indicative of Cosatu’s desire to reflect the non-racial democracy South Africa has become.

The apparently imminent affiliation of the banking and financial sector exclusively. We would consider merging Sasbo with the finance sector of Sasbo under the Sasbo banner," Mr Rowan said.

Sasbo has described this position as "arrogant."

The Cosatu affiliate’s organisation in the banking and financial sector has been pinned at around 4,000 members.

Sasbo, meanwhile, has not been impressed by the way Cosatu has handled the issue of Sasbo’s decision to affiliate.

General-secretary Herbert Mkhize told the South African Labour Bulletin last month Sasbo delegates had been surprised to see Sasbo observers at the recent Cosatu congress.

"We were not informed that Sasbo would be at congress. Although we would not have said no to their presence, we should at least have been consulted," Mr Mkhize is quoted as saying.

He was adamant that according to Cosatu policy, any union seeking affiliation had to go through an affiliate that was already organised in that sector.

"Unions must not be brought into Cosatu through the back door."

Mr Mkhize argued that Cosatu’s principles of worker control and democracy should form the basis of affiliation to Cosatu. He said Cosatu needed to be vigilant when recruiting unions to its fold.

Sasbo’s finance sector co-ordinator Stanley Mogomezulu was more forthright: "Sasbo cannot transform itself into a democratic union, it has to be transformed by Sascat. This can only be done by the absorption of its members into Sascat."

Mr Rowan said there had already been a couple of “semi-formal” meetings between Sascow and Sasbo officials, chaired by senior Cosatu officials.

"They have been trying to get the two disputing parties together. We have been co-operating," he said.

Mr Coleman said Sasbo’s application for affiliation, although viewed as "extremely important", should not be seen in isolation.

"Obviously Sasbo’s application represents a very significant shift. The profile of Cosatu is shifting from being a largely blue-collar, African-dominated federation to being a much more broadly representative federation including white-collar white, Indian and coloured workers."

He said Cosatu had had a number of approaches and applications over the past year. A number of "loose working relationships" had been established.

"It is a trend that is on the increase," he said, citing the organisation of the SABC, airways and public sector workers.

Mr Coleman added: "It is clear that Sasbo is in the majority in the finance industry but it’s not just a question of numbers. Equally clear is that Sascow is a very broad-based service union.

"We are looking at the international experience of how unions are organised in the finance sector."

While Sasbo is pinning its hopes on Cosatu intervention in its dispute with Sacucw, Sasbo’s national publicity boss Neil Coleman said the federation intended doing more than facilitating discussions and ensuring whatever decisions were reached were satisfactory to both parties and Cosatu.

Sasbo is the largest affiliate by far of the conservative Federation of South African Labour Unions.

But Sasbo general-secretary designate Graham Rowan said this week he believed Cosatu represented the main stream of industrial organisation.

"It has worried us for some time that we may have been operating outside the mainstream."

Sasbo applied for full affiliation to Cosatu early in December and were "expecting an answer any day now," Mr Rowan said.

"We would like to affiliate not later than April 1. We still have to give Federal three months notice of our decision to withdraw our affiliation."

Mr Coleman said that if Sasbo were to affiliate with Cosatu, the terms for its admission to the federation would represent a major coup for Cosatu and is therefore quite prepared to play hard-ball with Sascow over the terms for its admission to the federation.

"(Sasbo’s joining) will certainly be a major scoop for Cosatu," said Mr Rowan.

He added there was "very little possibility" of Sasbo being interested in what we regard to be a general workers’ union such as Sacucw, a reference to Sacucw’s organisation in the catering and general sectors.

"We would represent the interests of workers in the banking and financial sector exclusively. We would consider merging Sasbo with the finance sector of Sacucw under the Sacucw banner," Mr Rowan said.

Sascow has described this position as "arrogant."

The Cosatu affiliate’s organisation in the finance sector has been pinned at around 4,000 members.

Sasbo, meanwhile, has not been impressed by the way Cosatu has handled the issue of Sasbo’s decision to affiliate.

White-collar Sasbo set on joining Cosatu

FEDERATION of SA Labour Unions finance affiliate Sasbo would pursue its decision to affiliate with Cosatu, despite opposition from the SA Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers Union (Saccawu), Sasbo said.

Sasbo assistant general secretary Donald Graham said the union's executive made the decision late last year and had charged union officials with putting it into action.

However, in the latest SA Labour Bulletin, Cosatu's Zolile Mshelwane says the federation was placed in an awkward position by Sasbo's request to affiliate. Cosatu wanted to gain the union's 76,000 white-collar workers. But Saccawu's opposition to Cosatu's handling of the situation and its insistence that Sasbo merge with Saccawu meant Cosatu's acceptance of Sasbo would be difficult.

"The most probable scenario would be to grant Sasbo observer status in the federation while facilitating a negotiated common ground that will leave both unions satisfied," Mshelwane concludes.

He says Sasbo approached Cosatu instead of applying to Saccawu as required in union protocol. Sasbo general secretary Graeme Rowan told Mshelwane Sasbo was not keen on joining a general union with retail and catering members. Sasbo preferred to inherit Saccawu's finance sector members and build its own niche within Cosatu.

The unions are, meanwhile, locked in a recruitment war, with Sasbo extending its drive into the insurance sector and Saccawu devising an organisational strategy for the finance sector, especially banking. Saccawu was applying pressure on banks to alter their recognition criteria which favoured established unions such as Sasbo, Mshelwane says.

The unions were still pursuing merger talks under the mediation of former Saccawu general secretary Papi Kgasare.
Bank's affirmative action policy slated

THE Reserve Bank's affirmative action policy leaves much to be desired, an article in the latest edition of Tribune magazine says.

While the Bank had approved an affirmative action strategy document in November 1993, its feedback on affirmative action showed that the programme had only taken eight candidates on a two-year cadet programme and created four additional posts, Tribune said in its latest edition.

Of the Bank's national staff complement of 1 950 there were no blacks in general management, 1% in senior management, 5% at professional level, 6% at junior professional level and 33% in "utility" positions.

Put simply there was no black manager, deputy GM or assistant GM, and there was one senior professional manager, the article said.

Tribune said President Nelson Mandela could find himself in a tight spot when he was called to fill two government representative vacancies on the Bank's board of directors — one position has been vacant a year and the other six months.

"While white employees and some directors await his intervention with bated breath, their black counterparts are hopeful Mandela could use this opportunity to influence major corrective measures at the Bank," the article said.

The Bank, which had been criticised by the ANC, for clinging to the status quo, recently said it wanted to change but it had found it difficult to find suitable candidates.
Employment rising in financial services sector

Employment in the financial services sector maintained its upward trend, soaring to a new five-year high of 195 764 in December compared with 192 416 in December 1993, Central Statistical Service (CSS) figures released yesterday showed.

Banking sources said the figures were a sign of the robust growth characterizing the banking sector and reflected the economy's underlying performance.

While the number of black employees in the financial services sector grew a healthy 16% to 32 945 in the 12 months to December, the number of white employees fell from 131 898 to 128 630, the CSS said.

Council of Southern African Bankers (Cosab) GM Neo van Loggerenberg said the rise in the number of black employees was unlikely to be the result solely of affirmative action policies among banks and insurance companies.

He said the trend to increasing black staff, which was welcomed by Cosab, could be attributed to the dwindling resource pool of white employees.

"The financial services sector has realized that it has to look at the broader community to meet the skills base that it requires," he said.

But a Nedcor banking spokesman said affirmative action was the major reason for the growth in black staff. "Most financial institutions will report a swing toward greater recruitment of black staff."

The CSS also said the number of vacancies in the financial services sector had risen sharply in the year to December, with vacancies at banks and institutions up 72.9% to 185 posts.

Standard Bank assistant GM Charles Chemel said the increase in vacancies indicated the upbeat nature of the economy.

He said the rise in vacancies could be attributed to a rise-in-staff turnover — usually linked to positive economic performance — and to some banks growing their staff.

A Nedcor spokesman said the banking group had seen its vacancy level grow "more or less", in line with the CSS figures.

This was primarily attributable to strong business growth, diversification into innovative forms of banking and the opening of new branches.

Bank accused of being racist

By Mzimasi Ngudle

THE Johannesburg branch of the Banking, Insurance, Finance and Allied Workers Union will convene a meeting tomorrow to discuss its dispute with Standard Bank over racism, wage disparities and conditions of employment.

Bafawu president Mr Sipho Magazi said the meeting would be held at 11am at Ferreira House, Johannesburg.

The meeting follows Wednesday’s lunch-hour picket by about 100 bank employees at Standard Bank Centre in Johannesburg in protest against what they called “endemic racism.”

The workers, all Bafawu members, waved placards denouncing the South African Society of Bank Officials as a sweetheart union.

Magazi cited an incident of racism early this year when the management refused to provide a pool car for one black worker who became ill at work while, a month later, a white worker was driven home after learning that a family member had died.

Magazi said this was just one of the widespread racist practices that went unchallenged at the centre.

“We continue to receive complaints from our members that, despite the bank’s claim to be an equal opportunities employer, shop-floor racism is still rife and moreover countenanced by senior management.”

“We demand that the bank agrees to meet our Concerned Workers Committee to seek an amicable solution to the crisis,” Magazi said.

Magazi also said white managers are allegedly employing family members.

Mr E Harrington, a senior consultant for industrial relations who received a memorandum of workers’ demands on behalf of the Standard Bank chief Dr Conrad Strauss, refused to comment.
Suspension controversy after demos

Abdul Milazi reports on workers suspended for joining mass action

More than 30 workers at the Bophutatswana Building Society were suspended yesterday for taking part in Monday's national day of action organised by the Congress of South African Trade Unions.

South African Commercial Catering and Allied Workers Union shop steward Mr Thoba Zulu said the workers received notices of their suspension on their desks when they turned up for work yesterday morning.

"No work, no pay"

"When we told our general manager that we wanted to attend Monday's action, he said it would be treated on a 'no work, no pay' basis, but he never said anything about disciplinary action," said Zulu.

BBS general manager Mr Glen Chadwick, however, rejected this saying he had not suspended anyone and did not intend to do so.

Meanwhile, Cosatu and the National Council of Trade Unions have threatened to blacklist companies that took disciplinary measures against workers participating in Monday's demonstrations.

Unfair labour practice

Nactu general secretary Mr Cunningham Ngcekana said consumer boycotts, pickets and even legal action would be considered against such employers because the dismissal of workers for staying away from work constituted an unfair labour practice.

The federations will meet today to review the two-week mass action which ended on Monday and to make further decisions. The South African Chamber of Business yesterday estimated 100 000 workers had taken part in Monday's half-day demonstrations, while Cosatu estimated the number at 500 000.
Union in wrangle over numbers

Staff Reporter

THE Banking Insurance Finance Assurance Workers' Union (Bifawu) and Mutual and Federal Insurance Company have been at loggerheads again.

Usually, a company will sign a recognition agreement with a union if the union can prove it has the support of the majority of the company's workers.

In most industries the majority of workers are black, relatively politically "conscientised", occupy the lowest positions and are relatively easy for the unions to organise.

The financial sector does not fit this mould, however.

Bifawu admits it cannot muster majority support at Mutual and Federal, but argues that unless it is allowed a "foothold in the door, the industry will remain a white homeland".

Bifawu says it enjoys the support of more than 400 workers nationally — a "substantial minority". Mutual and Federal counters that the union's support is insubstantial.

The recognition struggle has gone on for several years now.

The decision of the Labour Appeal Court of June 24 last year should have resolved the impasse.

The court ordered: "The respondent's (Mutual and Federal) conduct in refusing to negotiate wages and and terms and conditions of employment in respect of the applicant's (Bifawu) members for the period commencing 1 January 1991 is declared to constitute an unfair labour practice."

But Mutual and Federal is hoping to have the Labour Court's decision overturned by the Appeal Court in Bloemfontein, and the union had its members holding lunch-time pickets throughout the country last week.

Bifawu told Mutual and Federal in a memorandum addressed to chairman Mike Levett yesterday: "We believe that the union has complied with all minimum legal requirements which permit it to be recognised as the collective bargaining unit for its members."

The memorandum continued: "Mutual and Federal has consistently resisted and rejected any attempt by the union to negotiate wages and terms and conditions of employment, despite the settlement agreement reached on July 9, 1990 between the (union) committee and Mutual and Federal to negotiate in good faith the wage discrimination, and salary increases, which were implemented on January 1, 1989."

The company was "seriously undermining and disregarding" good industrial relations and processes to resolve disputes peacefully.

The union demanded:

- Unconditional recognition.
- That the company stop "selective and discriminatory discipline" of staff.
- A minimum basic salary of R3,000 a month.
- Equal opportunity housing loans and medical aid schemes.
- Affirmative action and a narrowing of the wage gap between management and labour.

But Mutual and Federal assistant human resources manager Bill Moon said the problem was that the union "does not have the numbers at this stage."

"The numbers" varied from region to region, but were dismissed by Mr Moon as "certainly not significant representation".

Mr Moon said: "We have been engaged in talks for several years ... over the course of time, negotiations will continue."

Bifawu said the company's insistence that it organise the majority of workers was "ridiculous".

The company has been given 30 days to respond to the demands; failing which protest action would be intensified.
Employment

Increase in employment had in no way been at the expense of productivity.

Economist Vernon Kock said employment growth in the financial services sector had outflanked that in other sectors — including manufacturing.

However, the financial services sector was historically a strong employer and had not suffered a major decline in employment levels in decades.

Old Mutual economist Dave Mohr said the 3.2% increase in employment levels reflected the healthy performance of the banks and life offices, which had shown a steady increase in profits in the past year.

The figures also showed that the number of black employees in the financial sector had grown 18% to 33,697, while the number of white employees fell to 129,128 compared with a previous 121,206.

Bank spokesmen said these statistics reflected the affirmative action policies pursued by most financial institutions.

Absa GM Alec Hogg said his bank, which employed about 38,000 people, had launched an affirmative action campaign.

While Absa had not increased the number of people employed for every nine employees who resigned or retired, at least four were replaced by black staff. Black staffing levels had risen from 15% to about 20%, he said.

First National Bank GM Colin Hunt said higher employment levels in the sector as a whole could be attributed to growth in new business areas and to mergers and acquisitions which had boosted the employment pool. Affirmative action strategies were starting to show in the sector's employment figures, he said.

The fall in the number of white employees could be attributed to natural attrition, not to a deliberate strategy to reduce the number of white employees, he said.
Banks to create more jobs

Absa planning more branches in townships

By Sibusiso Mabaso

Malagamated Banks of South Africa's undertaking to reopen all its branches in Soweto and other townships will create a number of new jobs.

Absa executive director Mr Nallie Bosman said more Allied banks had been planned in other developing areas. Speaking at the launch of the newly upgraded Allied Bank in the Dobsonville shopping complex last week, Bosman said the remarkable growth of the then sub-branch to Allied Florida had compelled them to upgrade it to branch status and appoint more staff.

Bosman said during the past few months the staff at Allied Bank had been involved with numerous projects that were aimed at uplifting the community. He said Allied Bank has been flagshipged as the Absa brand for affordable housing and praised the Dobsonville staff for the important role they had played with the marketing team in making great headway with the Dream Home Project.

Bosman also announced Absa's plan to open an education centre for Dobsonville Shopping Complex, where people from the community would have access to facilities that provide borrower education. Branch manager Mr Bernard Montwedt said he would like to reinforce the bank's commitment to building the prosperity of the country through development and community involvement.

"We have embarked on a road that has no formula to success and one that Absa has never travelled. Ours is to reach out and work hard so as to be able to empower our people," Montwedt said.

Banks employ more blacks, Indians and coloureds

BY RONNY TSHABALALA

A record number of blacks, Indians and coloureds joined the ranks of financial institutions as South Africa moved to the global stage in the field of banking.

Central Statistical Service figures show 8,019 more black, Indian and coloured workers were employed in financial institutions, including building societies and insurance companies, at the end of June this year compared with a year ago.

This increased the number of workers of all racial groups by 3.9 percent from 193,770 to 201,289 workers between June last year and June this year. Of that number, black workers increased by 17.2 percent.

"Corporate finance houses have, apparently, taken this bold step in implementing affirmative action," he said.
FNB says it is the leader with affirmative action

Greta Steyn

FIRST National Bank (FNB) was proceeding more rapidly with affirmative action than other banking groups, according to figures provided in the annual report released yesterday.

FNB compared its staffing levels with those of the banking industry as monitored by the University of Cape Town’s business school. The figures showed more than 19% of FNB’s staff was black compared with an industry average of almost 16%. About 55% of FNB’s staff was white — less than the industry average of 65.75%.

The banking group said the number of black officials in management positions had increased by 42.6% during the financial year to end September 1995. It was the group’s intention to have 2,000 blacks in its management team and at present growth rates, the target would be achieved by 1998.

MD Barry Swart said in his review of the year’s activities the bank hoped to benefit from business opportunities arising next year when the provincial governments were in a position to borrow. FNB had won more than 70% of all the provincial banking business in SA, trebled its market share of local government business over the past two years and had gained a substantial share of central government business.

Chairman Basil Hersov said in his review bond and rent boycotts threatened the ability of financial institutions to provide funding for home loans. Hersov said crime and the culture of non-payment stood in the way of economic prosperity and delivery of the reconstruction and development programme. “Unless we can reduce the level of crime, and this includes white-collar crime, all the best efforts of business and government will come to nothing.”

He believed the crime problem was huge, but could be overcome, after which sustained economic growth prospects would be good.

FNB reported an increase of almost 23% in earnings per share and almost 21% in dividends for the year to September.

The bank’s share closed unchanged at R35 on the JSE yesterday, against a year high of R37 hit earlier this month.

Blacks claim raw deal at Metlife

By Isaac Moleli

CERTAIN sections within Metropolitan Life have come out clearly against the insurance company’s affirmative action policy, saying the programme is benefiting “male Afrikaners” more than blacks.

A source within the insurance outfit says black middle management is becoming impatient as people who have so far benefited from its affirmative action programme are male Afrikaners, whereas blacks are being “moved from one branch to another in the same positions”.

The Sowetan source has established that since a black business consortium, led by South Africa’s leading black businessman Dr Nthato Motlana, bought a controlling share of the company in 1994, the number of white general managers at the company’s head office has increased from two to seven. None of them is black.

The rate of resignation is said to have increased as people who are hired say they are not given decision-making powers.

The source says the provinces mainly affected are Gauteng, Northern Province and Metlife head office in Cape Town.

Metlife, however, denies these allegations, saying its affirmative action programme is still on track.

Metlife public relations manager Mr. Nico Oosthuizen says although none of the company’s seven general managers at the company’s head office are black, his company has made significant progress in relation to promotions.

“We have a clear-cut affirmative action policy that has been implemented over a couple of years and to date we are right on target,” says Oosthuizen.

He says the number of white middle management increased from 153 in 1994 to 165 last year. Black increased from 78 to 91 in the same period.

Whereas the number of blacks in senior management position increased from eight to 12 last year, the number of whites remained at 39 during the same period.

Metlife assistant general manager Mr. Wallace Albertine says of the 22 members of the top management structure only one is black.

“We have a limited number of positions for general managers but as the company grows, we are confident that new senior positions will be vacant and our objective is to see to it that a significant number of blacks occupy those positions,” Albertine says.
More black managers at Metlife

By Maggie Rowley

Cape Town - The affirmative action programme implemented at Metropolitan Life in late 1993 saw the proportion of black employees in indoor middle management and higher positions rise from 12.2 percent to 19.6 percent in the 23 months to September 1995.

According to the life office's annual report released this week, if field managers are included, the percentage of black senior and middle managers has grown from 26.2 percent to 31.6 percent over the same period.

The percentage of women in indoor middle management and higher positions increased from 9.6 percent in October 1993 to 15.4 percent at the end of last September.

Having to 1996, chairman Nipto Motlana said lower inflation and lower salary and wage increases, as well as an increasing number of life assurance applicants testing positive for Aids, would make strong premium growth difficult to achieve in 1996.

However, he said, being at the forefront of Aids modelling and research had enabled the life office to investigate the possibility of developing a policy which would offer life insurance to people who tested positive for the virus.

Also, Motlana said, while the establishment of the new provincial administrations had meant the relocation of some government employees, and hence negative employment growth for some regions, on the whole, the new system gave rise to increased government employment of people in Metlife's target markets, which presented new business opportunities for 1996.
250 staff at Liberty Life to lose jobs

BY EBONY DUNN

Johannesburg — Liberty Life is to rationalise its marketing, sales and administrative staff to reduce unnecessary and duplicated work.

It is believed nearly 250 staff members will lose their jobs.

In a statement released to Business Report late yesterday, the life assurer said it had been re-examining its marketing, sales and administrative procedures over a long period to "retain its pre-eminent position" in the South African financial services industry.

"A lot of unnecessary and duplicated work has been identified, with the result that the need for a number of functions within the company has fallen away and Liberty Life has unfortunately had to make a number of its staff redundant," the company said.

Sven Forsman, the public affairs manager, said many of the staff were being offered alternative employment elsewhere in the group.

To facilitate this, the life assurer had placed a moratorium on recruitment from outside the company.

An industry analyst said the move seemed to be a general strategy within the life insurance industry as it saw its competitive advantage eroded by the high costs of maintaining sales and administrative staff.

"The life companies are facing fairly aggressive competition from the smaller asset management companies and from other products like unit trusts, where the upfront entry cost is far lower, at only 5 percent of investors' money," the analyst said.

As another example of rationalisation within the industry, the analyst referred to Norwich Life.

"Each agent has his own business, thus removing all the 'expense related to employing that individual and (thereby) improving margins," said the analyst.
Cosatu and deputy finance minister meet

By James Lamont

Johannesburg — Representatives of South Africa’s trade unions met again yesterday in Johannesburg with Alec Erwin, the deputy minister of finance, ahead of next week’s Budget.

Both Erwin and Sam Shilowa, Cosatu general secretary, declined to comment on the talks, which also involved officials from the National Council of Trade Unions and the Federation of South African Labour Unions.

Shilowa, however, did confirm that the parties had discussed the forthcoming Budget. He said that he believed the unions could still influence the final contents of the Budget.

He said the unions would issue a statement before the Budget announcement.

A union source close to the talks said that the issue of income tax had featured prominently. He said income earners in the R40 000 to R100 000 a year range were taxed too heavily and incomes above R120 000 were proportionately better off. The unions were bargaining for a reduction in middle-income tax.

The source, however, believed the unions demands on the tax issue would be met over the next two to three years, but he said it was unlikely that they would be addressed before next Wednesday’s announcement.

Spate of new mines to ‘hit copper price’

By Ross Herbert

Johannesburg — Plunging copper prices were on the cards for the next three years as a result of a spate of recently announced new mines, analysts said yesterday.

The pessimism was led by the London-based Bloomeries Minerals Economics, which this week predicted a bloodbath in spot copper prices. The predictions cast a shadow on the R1.5 billion Northern Province copper project announced Wednesday by Palabora Mining, Anglo American and Miinoro.

Anglo American and Minoro are assessing or developing at least four major copper mines and further investment in troubled Zambian Consolidated Copper Mines (ZCCM).

Copper prices averaged about $1,30 last year, up 27 percent from 1994 levels. Prices of $1,01 a pound this year and $0.82 next year were forecast by Bloomberg. Another London forecast put prices of $0.70 by 1999, with long-term prices settling at $0.50.

A price of $0.82 would be catastrophic for a number of projects. For ZCCM, a price of that level would have a very serious effect if it was sustained for any period, said Jack Holmes, a director at Anglo American, focusing on Zambia, where the company has been evaluating several major copper projects.

“Most of our people in Anglo and Minoro are basing their long-range project judgements on a price of about $0.95,” Holmes said.

“One of the problems is almost every mine in the world is profitable at $0.90 a pound. Everyone who can is bringing a copper mine on stream,” said Nick Hatch, the head of the mining analysis unit for Ord Minnet in London.

The consensus among six analysts who spoke to Business Report was that supply would grow between 7 percent and 9 percent this year while demand would grow at 2,5 percent to 3,3 percent. Bloomberg predicted an oversupply of 475 000 tons by August. Last year, world production was about 10,44 million tons. New mines will add 1.1 million to 1.23 million tons of capacity by 1998.

A crucial factor changing the market's dynamics is a processing technology known as solvent extraction electro-winning, which can cut the production cost of copper from about 70c to between 20c and 30c. Not all copper ore is suitable for the process, but it accounts for about 25 percent of world production and is growing.

It is applied to old mine dumps and is planned for many new low-cost mines coming into production in the next three years.

“*As a result, analysts warned of a possible shakeout in the world market, driven by the new breed of low-cost producers. “A shakeout to a much lower price should happen in theory, but everyone said it would happen in 1993 and it didn’t,” Hatch said.

Standard Bank ‘prejudiced’, union says

By Llewelyn Jones

Johannesburg — Standard Bank would retrain or redeploy hundreds of workers in its latest round of restructuring, said the South African Commercial Catering and Allied Workers Union (Saccawu).

Saccawu said it believed the number of employees targeted because of the continuing activity value analysis was prejudiced against blacks.

The analysis is being conducted in conjunction with McKinsey’s corporate consultants.

The bank is evaluating employee functions in relation to the core nature of the business.

Saccawu members expressed their outrage by picketing the gala opening of the bank’s new head office for Standard Corporate and Merchant Bank in Simmonds Street, Johannesburg, on Wednesday.

In a letter of protest handed to Tokyo Sexwane, the premier of Gauteng, Saccawu said the bank was not implementing affirmative action policy to promote blacks to senior management positions.

Saccawu represents about 2 percent of the national bargaining unit and is not officially recognised by the bank.

Sanlam headquarters

NORMAN JOSEPH, Staff Reporter

STRIKING workers tried to storm the entrance of Sanlam's headquarters in Bellville today.
Scuffles broke out outside the building as about 100 workers tried to force their way in.
The workers, all members of the South African Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers' Union (Saccawu) are demanding a 20 percent salary increase and recognition of their union.
After chaos at the entrance and amid loud chanting from the workers, Sanlam's chief executive officer, Desmond Smith, accepted a memorandum, comprising a list of demands, from Bellville Saccawu leader Trevor Christians.
Mr Smith refused to sign the document and returned inside the building.
Several workers scuffled with Sanlam officials but police arrived and restored order.
Sanlam's labour relations consultant Ulrich
Stander said the union was in the minority, representing only five percent of the total workforce.
Standard to cut 700 jobs to rein in costs

Adrienne Gilmour

STANDARD Bank is to shed 700 jobs from its central service division — 10% of the division’s workforce — as part of its cost-cutting plans. The bank, which warned last month that it had to attack costs following an 18% jump in operating expenses to R4,3bn in the year to December, said it would offer incentives for staff to opt for severance and retirement packages. Management accounts for 7% of the cuts, while the remainder span supervisory and operating grades.

Staff could also be redeployed to lower levels or retrenched, depending on whether severance packages were accepted. Similar cuts were possible in other divisions, the bank said.

The job cuts — which Standard said had been run past finance union Sesbo — follow a study on its cost-effectiveness involving US consultant McKinsey & Co which found certain functions were no longer “adding value”.

Senior GM (operations) Rod Hyde said the terms of the offers matched or improved on industry norms.
Union members stop work

Bonile Ngqiyazwa (54)

ABOUT 300 SA Commercial and Catering Allied Workers' Union members downed tools for about three hours in Sandton City, Sandton, yesterday in solidarity with four shop stewards who were suspended in early March by Liberty Life Properties.

Sacawu finance sector co-ordinator Joseph Musi said the suspensions had been "unilateral and unprocedural".

The four unionists were suspended pending the findings of an investigation into allegations of "dishonesty and failure to comply with standard departmental procedures". The company accused them of "abusing or causing damage to Liberty Life property".

He said yesterday's protest action had been launched to press demands for wage increases and to highlight unfair and discriminatory practices at the Sandton City branch.

The union, Musi said, also wanted members' provident funds transferred to Old Mutual, where Sacawu had a trust fund which was under its control.

Musi said management had spurned efforts to open negotiations on wage demands, and a letter from the union to management on the issue had elicited no response.

Liberty Life Properties declined to comment on the matter.
Bank offers severance schemes

BY NANCY MVURU

Johannesburg—Standard Bank had offered voluntary severance and retirement schemes, which it claimed matched or bettered industry norms, to about 700 of its staff, the bank said yesterday.

This is in line with its stated objective of downsizing. Graeme Rowan, the general secretary of Saso, the finance workers’ union that claims to have 20,000 Standard Bank members, said the schemes “far exceed customary retrenchment packages”.

Rowan said the union was consulted before the packages were offered. The bank had assigned a team of Saso members to evaluate the packages, he said.

More such offers would depend on how many employees took this one, said John Gaunt, the senior consultant for corporate affairs at Standard Bank.

One reason the bank is downsizing is to reduce operating costs, Gaunt said. “Right now about 65 percent of our revenue is getting burned up in operating costs. We’d like to get that down to about 60 percent in the short to medium term, which would be us more in line with world standards.”

Those who did not accept the packages could be redeployed to similar areas within the bank if this was possible or face limited retrenchments “as a last resort.”

An analysis of the value of various jobs had been “the main vehicle” for improving cost-effectiveness, the bank said.
Banking industry braced for job cuts

Adrienne Gillomoe

The banking industry is bracing itself to shed at least 10% of its 125,000-strong workforce in the next three years, in line with international moves to cut costs.

Banking groups said yesterday that increased international competition, the demise of the retail deposit market and upgrading of technology would pressure them into cutting costs.

Analysts suggested cuts of 10-15% were on the cards, as staff costs were easiest to attack.

The banks declined to be drawn on the figures, but pointed to international trends which supported estimates.

Standard Bank, which unveiled plans this week to cut 700 jobs in its central services division, said it was switching attention to its branches.

Nedcor ruled out a major restructuring but said job cuts were likely.

"In line with international pressures and reducing the cost-to-income ratio there will have to be some rationalisation," assistant GM Ashley Sutton-Pryce said. It hoped to make the cuts through natural attrition.

Absa said it planned to keep staff levels constant, although it would boost income and productivity.

First National Bank said it was not considering new retrenchments.

Analysts said Standard's decision to cut 700 jobs was symptomatic of the problem affecting the SA industry. Operating cost-to-income ratios were 65%-70%, against the global norm of 55%. Labour-intensive branches had to be reassessed. The banks were investing heavily in advanced technology to lift efficiency. Standard said without the new technology it would have needed an additional 12,000 tellers.
Johannesburg — About 100 Southern Life workers said yesterday they would remain on strike until the insurer reinstated a suspended colleague.

"We are prepared to take the strike to the extent where management will try to dismiss us," said a workers' representative, who declined to be named.

The clerks at Southern Life's Johannesburg regional office downed tools on Friday to protest against the suspension of a woman in connection with a fraud investigation they claim was unfair.

Talks between the two parties have failed to resolve the dispute, prompting the workers to ask for an independent mediator to rule on the woman's suspension.

Paul Christie, the general manager of the life customer services unit, said Southern Life was prepared to appoint a mediator, but the clerks would first have to return to work.
Insurance firm wins hearing over union row

BLOEMFONTEIN — It could not be said that Mutual & Federal Insurance had acted unfairly when it refused to negotiate wages and employment terms for members of the Banking, Insurance, Finance and Assurance Workers' Union, the Appeal Court decided in Bloemfontein yesterday.

The court found that the Labour Appeal Court (Transvaal) had, on June 24, 1994, erred to find that the company's refusal to bargain with the union constituted an unfair labour practice.

About 13% of the company's employees were members of the union, its constitution excludes white employees from membership.

Union members fall into three categories: non-clerical workers (40%), clerical workers (9%) and first-level supervisors (6%). From the racial restriction in the union's constitution, it had the potential to represent all non-clerical employees but did not have the potential to represent the majority in the other two groups.

The company had been prepared to negotiate with the union in respect of one or more categories provided that the union was sufficiently representative of employees in the category.

Appeal Justice Vivier said the union's representativeness in the categories where the company had refused to bargain was minimal, and it could not be said it had acted unfairly.
Southern Life strike

ABOUT 150 Southern Life employees have vowed to continue with indefinite strike action and picketing unless management agrees to demands for scrapping the "no work, no pay" condition imposed on strikers.

The strike, which began 10 days ago, was initially linked with the suspension of an employee but the suspension was lifted yesterday. Workers are now also demanding the resignation of two managers.

Johannesburg — Clerical workers at Southern Life's regional office in Johannesburg were denied access to their workstations yesterday, several days after they returned to work following an 11-day illegal strike.

The workers responded by setting off firecrackers, toy-toy and singing.

The access denial followed the employees' return to work after the strike, precipitated by what workers alleged to be a wrongful suspension of a colleague. She was subsequently reinstated and the striking employees returned to work last Wednesday.

But Stanley Bezuidenhout, a member of the co-ordinating committee for the striking workers, said that on Thursday he and several others found their electronic access cards no longer opened the building's doors.

They were then told that they would not be allowed back to work unless they signed a form stating that they would properly fulfill the terms of their employment contract. Workers were suspicious of the forms, he said, and did not want to sign them.

Paul Christie, Southern Life's general manager of life customer service, in Cape Town, said: "Wednesday's return wasn't a proper return to work, but merely a continuation of the strike in a different format."

He said workers had refused to perform backlogged work and did not fulfill the duties specified in their contracts. That was why they were given the form to sign before being allowed back to work.

Southern Life had instituted legal action against the workers to prevent them from continuing with demonstrations, he said.
Finance union rescues Cosatu call for marches against banking
Bank jobs up despite cost-cutting

By Sean Paoli

F INANCIAL SERVICES EDITOR

Johannesburg — Local banks are employing more people even as they struggle to cut costs and improve their earnings from each employee, analysts said yesterday.

Earnings per employee are below international levels.

Employment levels at banking institutions and building societies rose 6.3 percent year on year to 134 062 people in March, the latest month for which figures are available, from 126 115 in the same month a year ago, according to figures from the Central Statistical Service (CSS).

Average salaries and wages, which include bonuses, declined 2.7 percent after being adjusted for inflation to R2754 a month in the first quarter this year from R2829 in the same period last year.

Banks have been hiring more people as the financial services industry grows. Growth is sought to meet the needs of the so-called unbanked clients as well as to offer sophisticated products to existing clients.

Employment levels have also swelled as foreign banks entered South Africa and hired people for their local operations. The country's big four banks on average achieve earnings from each employee of about R22 500 a year, with First National Bank (FNB) and Absa below the mean, Standard Bank slightly above it and Nedcor R10 000 above it. The average earnings from each employee are about four times higher in Australia and about 6.5 times better at British banks.

Earlier this year, Standard Bank offered 700 employees voluntary severance and retirement packages to reduce the cost ratio. Nedcor, FNB and Absa, the other big banks, have stated their intentions to reduce costs and improve profitability ratios.

They have said they will achieve savings by cutting staff numbers and by increasing their business.
Employment figures up at money houses

By Isaac Moledi

EMPLOYMENT figures at financial institutions throughout the country have increased by more than six percent, says the Central Statistical Service.

As of March this year, more than 212,000 workers were employed at banking institutions, building societies and insurance companies. Compared to the employment levels at the end of March last year, this represents an increase of 13,504 workers or 6.6 percent.

Employment at banking institutions and building societies increased by 6.3 percent to 134,062, while numbers at insurance companies increased by 7.7 percent to 78,010 workers.

More blacks employed

The number of blacks employed showed the most significant increases – 21.2 percent in banking institutions and building societies and 19.4 percent in insurance companies.

Salaries, wages and bonuses for the same period amounted to R1.9 billion for banking institutions and building societies and R1.3 billion for insurance companies.

Real average wages and bonuses a month for banking institutions and building societies showed a decline of 2.7 percent from R2,829 for the first quarter of 1995 to R2,754 for the first quarter of 1996.

Insurance companies' wages also showed a decline of 0.9 percent from R3,180 to R3,151.
Union strike continues

ABOUT 70 SA Commercial Catering and Allied Workers' Union members picketed the PriceForbes insurance brokering company in Johannesburg for the third day yesterday.

A shop steward said the company refused to recognise trade unionism and workers would intensify their pickets if their demands were not met. He also said there were no affirmative action, transformation and training programmes in place, and that the company allegedly reserved senior positions for whites.
White collar blacks affirmed

In April 1993, the Absa Group renewed its efforts to address the fact that they need to make their client base not only white, but in fact, black. The group feels that the growth of their client base has been slow and they are actively looking for ways to improve this. The group now has a far-reaching and effective "human resource and development" policy.

It does not see its action in terms of affirmative action policies but rather as part of an ongoing trend and a very necessary change in the workplace. It feels that it is crucial to address the issue of qualified blacks, noting that the percentage of qualified blacks is increasing, even in South African companies. The company is working hard to compete for qualified black personnel.

Consequently, Absa, rather than recruiting trained people as "tokens", has implemented growth and development schemes in order to attract the number of trained and qualified black personnel. Absa has an implementable programme surrounding their policy. No member will lose his or her job on the basis of colour, but the existing workforce will be extended through natural attrition, new employees are appointed to reflect the demographic make-up of the country.

In April 1993, 16 percent of the Absa workforce was black. That figure has now risen to 25 percent and still continues to rise as the pool of qualified blacks increases," says Griesedieck.

There are numerous training initiatives which include a Candidate Bank Training Program, Ongoing program for people with manic depression, and without any financial background. They are trained over a two-year period during which time they may be employed permanently by Absa. At any one time there are 650 700 interns on the programme.

The Absa Group is one of the main sponsors of the ABSA Growth Network. This is a basic computer training centre for unemployed people with 100 work stations and 220 students present on any given day. The students undertake an 8-12 week course during which they are taught computer literacy skills and software packages. Forty percent of the students are currently absorbed by the business market.

An innovative new programme involves the training of new clients via interactive television/computer system, whereby they can interact with the bank from anywhere in the country.

The majority of Absa employees belong to Sars, the finance union, which is affiliated to Cosatu. As the union mainly represents white workers in the banking industry, the affiliation has been challenging but Desiré Griesedieck, corporate industrial relations, says that members are positive about change. Absa supports the philosophy of consultation whereby workers from all levels are encouraged to participate in decision-making processes.

This year Absa has instituted a Growth Charter which states the rights of employees. They include the right to question the way we do things and propose changes which will ensure continuous improvement in your "career".

The relationship between the union and management is healthy. Absa's industrial relations policy is fully negotiated with the union and the bank believes that when the new employment equity legislation comes into force, Absa's policies and practices will support the aims of the legislation.

In fact the only threat to the labour relations horizon appears to be the issue of corporate clothing to women employees in the commercial bank, while male employees do not have such a benefit. Judging by their other successes in the company, Absa should not have any problem in sorting out this problem in the near future.

AMALGAMATED BANKS OF SOUTH AFRICA LIMITED. REG NO 66/0504/06.
The Reserve Bank last week revealed that its decision to raise interest rates was based on the need to control inflation. "We have a responsibility to ensure that inflation is kept under control," Governor Titan said.

"The increase in interest rates will help to curb inflation pressures. We are committed to maintaining price stability," he added.

The central bank also announced plans to review the monetary policy framework. "We will be looking at the longer-term implications of our current policy stance," Titan said.

This decision comes amid concerns about rising inflation and economic growth. "We need to balance the risks of inflation and growth," Titan said.

The central bank has been raising interest rates in recent months in an effort to control inflation. The latest increase brings the policy rate to 3%.

"The higher interest rates will help to reduce inflation expectations," Titan said. "We are committed to maintaining price stability for the long term."

The central bank's decision has been welcomed by economists and policymakers. "This is a welcome move," said Economist Smith. "It is in line with our expectations."

"The central bank has been doing a good job controlling inflation," said Policymaker Jones. "We welcome the higher interest rates."
FNB chief must go - Saccawu

THE South African Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers' Union yesterday called for the resignation of First National Bank managing director Barry Swart.

At a media briefing in Johannesburg, Saccawu official Sthembela Tshwete accused Swart and other FNB managers of nepotism.

Tshwete said the fact that the bank had censured Swart for awarding a family member a tender worth more than R6 million necessitated his resignation.

"The Swart move has actually evoked a lot of anger among union members and also confirms employees' claims that there is a lot of nepotism swelling among the ranks of FNB management."

The union wanted an independent inquiry into the nepotism claims because members had information which could assist such an inquiry.

Saccawu also reported a deadlock in wage negotiations with Sun International management. National organiser Bongani Madikiza said 7,000 employees of the hotel group were preparing to go on strike if the parties fail to reach agreement at a meeting scheduled for Thursday.

Said Tshwete: "We are ready for any action at any time. - Sapa."

Staff call on Swart to resign FNB board accused of letting him off the hook

"We are warning members of the board that their actions have led to the current situation. We demand that the board take responsibility for their mistakes and resign," according to a statement released by the Coalition of Social Democrats (CDS). The coalition includes the Democratic Left Alliance (DLA), the Social Democrats (SDP), the United Democratic Movement (UDM), and the South African Communist Party (SACP).

The statement accuses the board of FNB of neglecting their responsibilities and failing to address the issues that led to the bank's recent losses. The coalition calls on the board to resign immediately to allow for a fresh start for the bank.

"We are deeply concerned about the continued failure of the FNB board to address the issues facing the bank. The board has consistently failed to take decisive action to address the problems that have led to the bank's losses," said the statement.

The coalition also noted that the bank has recently been involved in controversial appointments, including the appointment of a new CEO who has faced criticism for his past decisions.

"These appointments are unacceptable and we demand that they be rescinded," the statement concluded.

The coalition is calling on the government to intervene and ensure that the bank is properly run.
FNB comes under fire

Adrienne Gillmore

FIRST National Bank had failed to impose the same discipline standards on its executives that it imposed on the rest of its work force, banking union Sasbo said yesterday.

The union, which represents more than 70% of the bank's employees, said many of its members had been fired for offences far less serious than those pinned on MD Barry Swart.

Swart was censured by the FNB board last week for employing his daughter to help decorate the group's Bank City, headquaters. His other daughter is a partner in a marketing and communications agency used by the bank.
Union says FNB's MD Swart must go

Reneé Grawitzky

THE SA Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers' Union (Saccawu) has called for the resignation of First National Bank MD Barry Swart and an independent inquiry into nepotism in the company and the R6.3m contract awarded to Swart's daughter to refurbish Bank City.

Saccawu publicity officer Sithembhele Tekwete said yesterday that recent revelations around Swart confirmed the union's earlier suspicions and allegations that top management at FNB were promoting nepotism and such practices had "swelled the ranks of management".

The union demanded that the findings of the FNB investigation into the incident be made public, and it also called for an independent inquiry to look at nepotism in the company.

Tekwete said the union would be prepared to give evidence at an inquiry and was in the process of gathering information on the extent to which nepotism was being practised.

Tekwete said the union had obtained certain documents, one containing an acknowledgement by the bank that if Saccawu was recognised a "lot of things would be uncovered".

A union source within FNB said an internal plan prepared by the bank's industrial relations department highlighted the union as a "flashpoint" and indicated there would be "chaos in the bank" if the union was recognised. The source said the plan indicated management should be careful of the union.

Union sources indicated that a lot of people were frustrated with the fact that Swart was opposed to transformation in the bank and had blocked change, and possibly the release of the information on his daughter was an attempt to discredit him. Bank sources said several allegations against Swart had been investigated in the inquiry by non-executive directors Mervyn King and Robbie Williams.

Meanwhile, the union outlined further strike plans at Sun International in the wake of the disruption at all operations at the weekend. The union said the company could face action at "any moment". The union said action could occur prior to a planned meeting tomorrow with the company.

The union also indicated that workers at Joshuva Doore and Edgars would be balloted for strike action during the first week in September. Saccawu said the deadlock with Edgars revolved around wage differentials.
Bank chief quits in contracts dispute

ARGUS CORRESPONDENT

Johannesburg – The 40-year banking career of First National Bank managing-director Barry Swart will come to an abrupt end today because of the discovery by the board that he awarded decorating contracts for several million rands to his daughter.

This follows an announcement by FNB chairman Basil Hersov yesterday evening after talks between Mr Swart and the board. Mr Hersov said the board had accepted Mr Swart’s request for early retirement.

A statement on management continuity and possibly the name of his successor will be released today.

Bank spokesman Alec Grant would not disclose details of the package, saying it would be negotiated according to salary. Several people at the bank have indicated that Mr Swart earns R1.6-million a year.

Mr Swart awarded decorating contracts for the bank’s Johannesburg headquarters to his daughter, Tanya Labuschagne.

Last night Mr Swart said that in spite of his publicly expressing sincere regret for any embarrassment he had caused the bank, it appeared there had been “an erosion” of confidence in him.

He feared that this, as well as the current public debate over his credibility, could result in prejudice to the bank, its staff and shareholders.

“Tn the best interests of the bank and as the proper action for a person in my position, I should take early retirement,” he said, and thanked his staff, colleagues and business associates for their support.

Staff at FNB’s Bank City headquarters said Mr Swart should have resigned as soon as the decorating contracts were made public last month.

One manager said: “We need some new blood. There have been many rumours for years about these contracts and many other things.

“The morale among staff has been low. People feel … many top managers can’t be trusted,” he said.

Banks buck trends by employing more staff

By Nancy Myburgh

Johannesburg — Employment at South Africa's financial institutions rose by 7.1 percent, or 14,277 people, between the end of June last year and this June, the Central Statistical Service (CSS) said yesterday.

This comes in spite of reports earlier this year of plans by some of the country's major commercial banks either to reduce staff numbers through attrition or voluntary retirement packages, or to keep employment static.

"Basically, our growth over the past year has been in new initiatives," said Ashley Sutton-Pryce, the assistant general manager of human resources at Nedcor Bank. "(But) we've certainly seen a leveling off in recent months."

Louis Moll, the assistant general manager for industrial relations and support services at First National Bank, said: "We had fairly steady growth across the board, but recently we have put a stop to that, as we are having a relook at our staff numbers."

The CSS figures revealed that banks and building societies had recorded an annual increase of 5.9 percent in employment over the period, or just over 7,500 people, while insurance companies recorded an annual increase of 9.3 percent, or slightly more than 6,700 employees.

Of the different population groups, the number of new black employees showed the largest annual growth, with a 16.4 percent increase at banks and building societies in the period and a 19.3 percent increase in numbers at insurance companies.

The number of new white employees showed the smallest annual employment rise, with just 0.3 percent more people employed at banks and building societies and 3.8 percent at insurance companies.

The number of coloured employees showed an annual increase of 16 percent in banks and building societies and 8.8 percent in insurance companies.

Asian employment grew by 13.1 percent in banks and building societies and by 7.7 percent in insurance companies.
Insurance group uses lie detector on staff

NANCY MYBURGH

Johannesburg — Internal fraud in the insurance industry is so rife that the Hollard Insurance Group now requires selected new employees to take polygraph or lie detector tests, Miles Japhet, the managing director of Hollard, said yesterday.

Japhet said Hollard had instituted stricter internal controls over the past year because there was considerable opportunity for insurance company personnel to help inflate insurance claims fraudulently and skim off a profit in the case of a vehicle hijacking or if someone had been involved in an accident.

"All new employees who handle money undergo a polygraph test. We (also) use random telephone conversations.

"That is where you get the opportunity to pick up collusion. Unfortunately, you have to wage war against internal fraud, and (you must) not be naive.

"But it is our duty. We cannot keep having honest clients pay the costs of fraudulent claims through higher premiums," he said.

Given the average Hollard claim assessor's workload and pay scale, Japhet estimated that a 1 percent inflation of a month's claims could afford fraudulent gains equal to a month's salary.

But the cost savings from greater control of internal fraud, as well as more efficient risk management, had allowed Hollard to reduce clients' insurance premiums in certain kinds of policies by about 10 percent, he said.

Another large insurer said yesterday that his firm did not go as far as Hollard in detecting internal fraudsters.

"We have checks and cross-checks... Our major control is drumming into staff that they have to adhere to the controls and that checking procedures are in place.

"That is part of our ethos," he said.

However, "it is difficult to pinpoint where we've been successful and where the gaps (in internal fraud detection) are," he added.

Hollard is a privately-owned insurance group, whose gross written short-term premiums increased 47 percent in the year to March 31. Japhet said they were projected to exceed R800 million in the present financial year.

Labour: Retrenched workers told to sign indemnifying forms before being paid

Police oust Liberty protesters

Jonathan Rosenthal

Johannesburg — Liberty Life Properties is trying to force retrenched workers to sign forms indemnifying the company against any claims arising from their retrenchment before it will hand over money owed to them from the sale of shares and share options.

About 350 of the retrenched workers yesterday protested against the company's actions at the Sandton Square shopping centre, where the MTN Champions tennis tournament is taking place, before being forced away by the police.

Documents in the possession of Business Report show that retrenched workers who qualified for share options while in the employ of Liberty Life Properties would have to sign the indemnity form before they would be handed cheques for the proceeds of the sale of these shares or share options.

The form states that workers who accept cheques do so "in full and final settlement of all disputes between myself and Liberty Life Properties", and that the transfer of benefits from the Liberty Life Pension Fund will be dealt with separately from this agreement.

About 350 workers, members of the South African Commercial Catering and Allied Workers’ Union, were retrenched by Liberty Life Properties at the end of August when the company outsourced cleaning and security functions.

But retrenched workers and union officials alleged that Liberty guaranteed to ensure that they would be hired by subcontractors, Joseph Mosi, a union official, further alleged that Liberty Life had withheld provident and pension fund monies owed to the retrenched workers.

Karen Mitchell, a director of Liberty Life Properties, declined to comment on the specifics of union allegations regarding the payment of pension and provident funds and the company's alleged undertaking to guarantee workers their jobs.

Union takes bank to court over longer trading hours

Bid to resolve dispute by negotiation

Estelle Randall
Labour Reporter

Boland Bank's introduction of longer banking hours last week has raised the ire of employees and their trade union who claim they were not consulted.

Sasbo-Finance Union yesterday also asked the Labour Court to compel the bank to grant it organisational rights in terms of the new Labour Relations Act.

The case was the first in the Western Cape to come before the Labour Court, a new dispute-adjudication body established by the Labour Relations Act, which came into operation last month.

Yesterday the Labour Court ordered employees to continue working the extended hours until the issue is resolved by negotiation over the next six weeks between Boland Bank and the Sasbo-Finance Union.

If it is not resolved through negotiation by February next year, the court will make a ruling instead.

Boland Bank was ordered to meet the Sasbo-Finance Union today to discuss the union's request for organisational rights under the new Labour Relations Act.

The court also ordered Boland Bank to restate its support for freedom of association and employees' right to join a trade union of their choice, not to condone victimisation or intimidation of trade union members and to discipline anyone guilty of victimisation. Boland Bank must fax a copy of the court order to all its branches by close of business today.

On December 2 Boland Bank began to stay open for business until 5.15pm for the convenience of the public.

But the Sasbo-Finance Union says employees were led to believe that the increase in working hours to 174 a month would give them greater freedom to arrange their own working hours. Instead, the longer hours meant bank employees left work an hour later.

The new hours will cause problems for employees' child care, transport and other arrangements, the union says.

Financial sector hires more blacks

Cape Town — The blackening of the workforces of banks, building societies and insurance companies is proceeding apace.

According to the Central Statistical Service, 38 percent of building societies and banks’ employees, and 21 percent of insurance companies’ employees were black at the end of the third quarter, up from 18 and 19 percent last year.

Whites made up 61 percent of banks and building societies’ workforces, down from 65 percent, and 39 percent of insurers’ workforces, down from 60 percent.

At the same time, banks and insurance companies employed more people. The workforce at banks increased from 124 000 to 130 000 and insurance companies’ workforces from 72 000 to 75 000.

Wharton-Hood quits after LOA dispute

Belinda Beresford

LIBERTY Life vice-chairman Dorian Wharton-Hood resigned as chairman of the Life Offices Association on Friday after his company refused to accept an LOA-instigated investigation by the Financial Services Board (FSB) into its payments to brokers.

Wharton-Hood had argued against continued support for regulation of commission paid on life assurance policies but not competing products. He was elected the association's chairman last November.

LOA acting chairman and Norwich Life CE Charles Davies said the resignation followed "an internal disagreement about interpretation of an aspect of law relating to commission payments ... and also about adherence to the association's code of conduct".

Wharton-Hood said it was "ridiculous" that life assurance commissions were regulated by law while payments to brokers for competing products such as unit trusts were not.

He said "so far" he was the only member of the LOA management committee to hold this view. He felt it was "shortsighted and ignorant of the real world" for the LOA to ignore the issue.

"We should either apply for commission regulation to apply to all competitors, or deregulate commission", he said. Deregulation would mean some form of commission disclosure.

Wharton-Hood said Liberty Life was not going to change its commission system as a result of the FSB's investigation. Although Liberty was prepared to go before an independent judicial authority to settle the dispute, it would not be judged "by people with vested interests" in the matter, he said.

Liberty pays brokers an administration fee for inputting life assurance applications onto a computer network. LOA director Jurie Wessels said many members felt Liberty's administration fees were actually commission payments. By law, commissions paid to agents and brokers have a maximum limit of 35% of the first year's premium. The administration fees pushed the commission to Liberty's agents over the legal limit, Wessels said.

Wharton-Hood said Liberty "highly disputed" the allegation the processing fees were extra commission. He added that other life assurers were being a "little bit backward" about the issue.

Although his resignation involved "no acrimony at this stage", a lot depended on which other LOA members would go along with his views, Wharton-Hood said.

On Friday the LOA agreed to implement a 21-day cooling off period for all new life assurance policies, effective from June 1. In addition, from the same date, all brokers and agents would have to disclose who they were employed by, and any ties with specific life assurers.
The powerful Life Offices Association, which represents the multi-billion life assurance industry, is not under threat of collapse because of a dispute with Liberty Life, says executive director Jurie Wessels.

"Honestly don't think there is a chance of the Life Offices Association (LOA) breaking up," Mr Wessels told the Cape Argus.

The LOA is the self-regulatory body of the life insurance industry. It is also the representative body of the industry in its dealings with the Government.

Mr Wessels said if it disappeared Government would have to step in with "a lot of legislation" to take the place of the self-regulation or the man in the street would be in a very vulnerable position.

The association was a very useful instrument for its members to try and influence their operating environment, but Mr Wessels conceded that the circumstances surrounding the dispute with Liberty could force the LOA to change some aspects of its code of conduct.

The battle with Liberty revolves around its decision to award payments to brokers using its new Blue Print system. The Financial Services Board has construed the payments as a transgression of the Insurance Act in that brokers' commissions would then exceed the maximum commission provided for in the Act.

"In this particular case, Liberty is doing something which is not specifically addressed in the law and there is a difference of interpretation," Mr Wessels said.

"Some members say what Liberty is doing definitely a contravention of the law, and Liberty disagrees."

Liberty, however, has said that the Blue Print system allows brokers to do the administration themselves, and they are simply being paid for that.

But Mr Wessels said the fundamental question was not really how to deal with Liberty, but rather about having commissions regulated in law.

"We are the only industry that has commissions regulated by law - it's a good consumer protection measure - but it does put us at a competitive disadvantage," he said.

"For instance, the mutual fund industry (unit trusts) can pay higher commissions than we can for competing investments - that is really what is behind the dispute."

Mr Wessels said the industry would now have to take a fundamental view on whether or not commissions should continue to be regulated in law.

"It may happen that the LOA will have to concede that there are certain things which are so competitive in nature that the association does not have the power to regulate them ... and pass the ball back to the Government to clarify the law or make new law. The LOA's role would be diminished, but it certainly won't break up."
Cape Town - While there was no quick solution to the dispute between Liberty Life and the Life Offices Association over payments to brokers, the matter appears to have spurred progress on the possible deregulation of commissions.

Jurie Wessels, the executive director of the LOA, said at the weekend that discussions about the dispute between Liberty Life and other members of the LOA were continuing.

The dispute revolves around Liberty’s payments to independent brokers using its new Blue Print system.

Liberty contends the payment is for an outsourcing of certain policy administration functions, but the LOA views the payment as an additional commission. Charles Davies, the new chairman of the LOA, said after the meeting that it could be weeks before the matter was concluded.

"These are weighty issues which require thorough consideration to avoid short-term solutions," he said.

Wessels disclosed, however, that the LOA had decided at Friday’s meeting to appoint a task team — made up of representatives from various life industry disciplines — to investigate the regulated commission structure as stipulated in the Insurance Act.

He said these representatives (who were still to be appointed) would report back to the LOA’s management committee on the implications of abolishing, altering or retaining deregulation.

Commissions regulation is seen as an important consumer protection mechanism, although it does place life assurance at a disadvantage with other providers of investment products.
Union threatens bank in refinements row

The Bankers and Allied Workers' Union (BWA) is threatening to take legal action against the bank's new refinements policy, which it claims will lead to job losses and lower wages.

"We are gravely concerned about the impact of this policy on our members," said BWA President John Smith. "It is a clear violation of our members' rights and we will not tolerate any further erosion of their benefits."
Shortage means higher salaries

By Abdul Miah

FINANCE professionals have become expensive to employ because they are in short supply, a factor which has pushed up salary increases in the finance sector by between 10 and 20 percent.

This was revealed by auditors Deloitte and Touche in their financial salary and market review published this month.

The review cited the brain drain among the newly qualified as well as the small number of black chartered accountants entering the market as reasons for higher salaries.

Employers in the finance sector, especially the banking institutions, are now offering incentives to their employees and, according to the survey, are even offering "golden hellos" to attract top level staff.

The total number of qualified black chartered accountants increases by 20 percent last year, and currently stands at 124. Deloitte and Touche argue that the competition to attract these newly qualified accountants is intense.

"Many organisations have set up specific training strategies to address the problem, although a lack of quality education offered at traditional black universities is of concern," the review argues, that pressure on trade unions is mounting for further disclosure of executives' salaries.
Banking sector bucks trend as number of jobs falls

Greta Steyn

The number of jobs in the banking industry increased 1.9% last year—a sharp contrast to the declines recorded in many other sectors of the private economy.

Central Statistical Service (CSS) figures released yesterday showed that employment in the insurance sector increased. Last year's jobs growth in the financial services sector followed a decade of expansion in the face of economic hardships which drove other firms to cut jobs.

Financial services is the only sector—other than the public sector—which showed jobs growth between 1988 and 1996. Economists said financial services was not labour intensive and the sector would not provide solutions to SA's employment problems.

The employment growth in financial services contrasted with CSS data released last week for manufacturing, construction and mining. The construction industry had a particularly bad year, with the number of jobs falling more than 7%. The decline occurred despite hopes that the reconstruction and development programme would gain enough momentum to improve the situation.

The manufacturing industry, the country's largest employer, also had a bad year, with employment shrinking more than 3%. The sector employed almost 1.43-million people at the end of December last year. Employment in mining and quarrying also fell.

Employment in the public sector for the last quarter of last year is not yet available. CSS will publish a summary after employment data for all sectors is released.

Bureau for Economic Research economist Pieter Laubscher said the view that the CSS figures understated total employment in the economy was gaining ground. That meant the jobs situation might not be quite as bad as the figures suggested.

However, the bureau's surveys among business people broadly confirmed the official figures.

"The employment surveys in the first quarter of this year were still negative, but we can look forward to an improvement in the second half. At least the rate at which employment is shrinking has started slowing down," he said.

The bureau believed there could even be a small rise in private sector employment for the year as a whole—but the forecast was based on a bullish gross domestic product projection of about 3% growth this year.

Laubscher said when growth in...

Ag metast crime by bank workers nationwide
Staff close banks in crime protest

14 killed in 180 robberies

Banking came to a virtual standstill during lunch hour yesterday when staff took to the streets to protest against the increase in bank robberies.

In Cape Town nearly 1,000 bank employees marched from the Grand Parade to Parliament where they handed a memorandum calling for action to a Ministry of Safety and Security official.

They called on the Government to apply stricter bail conditions for serious crimes and proposed better pay and conditions of employment for the demoralised police service.

South African Society of Bank Officials held similar marches in other major centres.

Society secretary-general Graeme Rowan said the aim of the protest was to urge the Government to pull up its socks in dealing with violent crime.

"Gangsters must be removed from society. Bank workers are sick and tired of being victims."

Mr Rowan said there had been about 180 bank robberies since January, most of them in Gauteng.

More than R30-million had been stolen and 14 bank employees killed.

"The South African finance industry is the country's shop window to the world and if the workers in it are not safe, investments are also not safe, tourism will suffer and Cape Town will not get the 2004 Olympics," Mr Rowan said.

Banks whose staff took part in the march closed for business between noon and 2 pm.

The protest had the blessing of the Council of South African Banks which represents the country's major banks. The council published a full-page advertisement with black and white photographs of a bank robbery in a morning newspaper, applauding the action by employees.

"After all our staff have been through in the past few months, we're sure you wouldn't begrudge them two hours to protest," the advertisement said.

It added that the banking industry supported the society's appeal for more effective measures to protect the safety of bank staff and customers.

LOA to try to resolve Liberty Life dispute

Belinda Beresford (69)

The Life Offices Association (LOA) will try today to resolve an internal dispute over commission payments which could otherwise lead to the destruction of the organisation.

Liberty Life has been in dispute with other LOA members over a R125 fee it pays brokers for using the Blueprint system. The LOA has said the payments are commission and Liberty is in breach of regulatory guidelines.

Liberty has said the payments are a service fee, paid regardless of whether a sale is made. Liberty directors have said repeatedly the company will leave the LOA rather than back down.

Liberty Life executive director Steve Handler said yesterday that if necessary Liberty would resign under "conditions of great regret, but adhering to principles". He said no compromise deal had been suggested, but Liberty regarded the dispute as a "question of principle".

It was the intention to resolve the situation today.

Observers of the dispute say Liberty's departure could signal the end of the LOA, which one analyst described as one of the most powerful financial services lobbying groups.

BANKING SECTOR SHEDS JOBS FOR THE FIRST TIME IN SEVEN YEARS

Cape Town — The banking industry shed 1721 jobs in the year to March 31, the Central Statistical Service said yesterday. This is the first drop in job numbers in the industry in more than seven years. Total employment in the sector dropped from 126,577 at March 31 last year to 127,986 at March 31 this year.

Senior bankers said the latest figures might signal the start of a new trend of declining employment in the industry. John Warster, the head of human resources at Standard Bank, said: “Competition from international banks is forcing local banks to cut costs. Staff cost is an area where savings are still possible. Foreign banks are also cutting staff numbers by outsourcing functions and forcing local banks to follow suit.”

In March last year 63 percent of workers in the banking industry were white. The figure dropped to 58 percent by March this year, the service said. — Christo Velechenk

Cash deliveries to four major bank outlets in Gauteng, North West and Mpumalanga were delayed by up to five hours yesterday when about 60 SBV 'protection' officers refused to work, the SA Society for Bank Officials said.

The officers, who man armoured cash delivery trucks for Absa, First National Bank, Standard Bank and Nedcor, were protesting against what they alleged were unacceptable safety conditions and insensitive management.

Society spokesman Dekkies Pretorius said they resumed their duties after management agreed to meet the society today to resolve the problem.

SBV is jointly owned by the four banks.
Southern Life to shed jobs in restyling plan

Cape Town — Southern Life, the life assurance company, will shed about 900 jobs in the next two years in a transformation programme to reduce costs and improve investment performance.

Jan Callitz, the chief executive of Southern Life, said at the weekend the introduction of streamlined back office and processing operations because of integration would see administrative staff reduced by about 600 over the next two years.

A new market focus and the rationalisation of product and service offerings would also allow a reduction in sales staff by about 300 over two years, Callitz said.

A benefit of this integration and new focus would be a reduction in the company's cost-to-income ratio from 17.7 percent at present to 13 percent by the end of the 2003 financial year.

He said retrenchment would be considered only as a last resort. “We experience natural attrition of around 11 percent (about 300 people) of our administrative staff each year, while the turnover rate of our sales staff is higher.”

Callitz said this number would be complemented with reskilling and redeployment, voluntary early retirement and voluntary severance.

“This is a narrower market sector than our current focus, but one which shows strong growth and better matches Southern’s capabilities.”

He said the product range rationalisation would lead to a significant reduction in administrative complexity and costs.

FBC to cut staff by quarter

Belinda Beresford [B99] DDR 19 11 97

FUTURE Bank Corporation (FBC) is to cut its retail banking staff by about 25% in a rationalisation process which will also see the closing of some branches.

FBC retail banking executive director Trevor Fournie said there would be a loss of about 90 positions, ranging across all levels from general management down. Another 40 to 50 people would be relocated or retrained.

Fournie said the changes were part of the integration process between Citizen's Bank, Bophuthatswana Building Society and Future Bank, which merged to form FBC earlier this year. The merger had involved the consolidation of three head offices and three businesses into one.

In line with modern banking trends FBC would be converting its "very manual-intensive" services into more electronic facilities.

From next week FBC would be creating a support system which would offer staff various forms of counselling, advice and support in a "very tough and trying time". The rationalisation process should be completed within a couple of months, he said.
Saccawu to get FNB protest report today

FRANK NxUMALO

JOHANNESBURG — About 200 First National Bank (FNB) employees allied to the South African Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers' Union (Saccawu) will gather at the Library Gardens in central Johannesburg today to receive an FNB management report on their protest march last year.

Joe Musi, Saccawu's spokesman, said the FNB employees who had protested at the time against "unilateral deductions" on company benefits had been issued with individual written final warnings.

Musi said top of the agenda at the union's conference next week would be the massive retrenchments planned by the financial services sector and alleged discrimination in the workplace.

Meanwhile, the South African Institute of Race Relations will hold a media briefing today on unemployment in the country. The institute said unemployment had become "one of the most serious and intractable" socio-economic problems.

The institute said official estimates of unemployment were 32.4 percent in 1994 and 29.3 percent in 1995.

"According to comparative estimates by the International Labour Organisation, only Macedonia and the island of Reunion had higher rates of unemployment than South Africa," the institute said.

"Other countries with notoriously high unemployment rates, such as Spain and Algeria, are well below the South African figures, with rates just above 20 percent."

However, the institute said a recent study by its team, led by sociologist Lawrence Schlemmer, found that "official estimates are too high."

A significant portion of people who claim to be unemployed were active in the informal sector, the study found.
East London Land Bank staff protest against Dolny

EAST LONDON — All 30 staffers at the Land and Agricultural Bank of SA's East London branch picketed yesterday against the "radical changes" instituted by national MD Helena Dolny.

This followed nationwide protests on Monday.

The regional secretary of finance union Sasbo, Adrian Coetzee, said the staff were outraged by radical, unilateral changes introduced by Dolny since she joined the bank six months ago.

He said Dolny's unwillingness to negotiate the changes, which were part of the affirmative action process at the bank, could drive the mostly conservative employees of the bank to strike. This option would be discussed at a national Sasbo meeting with the bank's management today, he said.

Coetzee said the main grievances were that senior personnel had to reapply for their posts, but there was no indication what would happen if their applications were unsuccessful; and English would be the official language of the bank, although Coetzee said 70% of the bank's employees and clients were Afrikaans-speaking. — ECN.
Absa staff threaten strike action

Business Editor

Employees at ABSA banks across the country are threatening to stop work next week now attempts to resolve a salary dispute have failed.

Piet Heymans, assistant general secretary of the 75,000-strong banking union, Sasbo, confirmed that the Commission for Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration had failed to resolve the salary dispute last week.

The 22,000 Sasbo members in Absa were asking for a wage increase of 11%, to be implemented in April. Absa was offering 10.25%, he said.

"Our members are adamant that they want to share in the improved results of the Absa group. The decision to take industrial action was reached after serious consideration and as a last resort," Mr Heymans said.

Absa was paying 20% more in dividends to shareholders, and the 11% salary demand would cost the bank "a mere R10-million".

A programme of "rolling mass action" would probably begin on Tuesday next week and culminate in a general work stoppage the following Friday, Mr Heymans said.

"Our members are demanding that they be paid fairly for their hard work and extra effort.

"We trust that Absa clients will understand, and bear with the disruption that industrial action may cause."
Absa strike likely to be averted

FRANK NXUMALO

Johannesburg — The planned three-day strike at Absa, the banking group, could be averted as the South African Society of Bank Officers (Sasbo) said yesterday that Absa's revised offer was likely to be accepted.

"The parties deadlocked last Friday at the Commission for Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration (CCMA) when Sasbo rejected a company offer of a 10.25 percent wage hike, sticking to its demand of 11 percent."

Although Piet Heymans, Sasbo's assistant general secretary, would not be drawn into revealing the details of the revised offer because of the "sensitivity" of the issue, he said it was an offer "we could live with."

Meanwhile, Shaun Oelschig, a Sasbo spokesman, said hundreds of non-clerical staff at Standard Bank nationwide had been "invited to apply" for voluntary severance packages that could be worth about 10 months salary plus pension contributions.

John Verster, Standard Bank's general manager for human resources, said the bank had been "looking at ways of reducing staff and costs in areas of non-core activities and operations."
Finance union Sanbo declares payout dispute
Absa sees few job losses

Mr Van der Merwe said Absa had 110 branches in the Western Cape which employed 3,200 people.

There had been a freeze on employment in the province and the staff turnover of 16% a year – a little lower than Absa's national average of 12% to 14% – ensured that staff would be reduced sufficiently through natural attrition.

A small number of jobs would be lost in the province, mainly through the rationalisation of branches.

The merger of Absa Group's four bank brands will result in only a negligible number of retrenchments in the Western Cape, says regional general manager Pieter van der Merwe.

The group says the merger of Volkskas Bank, Allied Bank, United Bank and Trust Bank will lead to important savings, but will cost 1,900 jobs across the country over the next two years.

Banking union rejects Cosatu levy for election campaign

BY EDDIE JAYIYA

The South African Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo) dealt Cosatu a political blow yesterday by rejecting a levy aimed at supporting the ANC’s election campaign.

The rejection followed calls by the central committee for various unions to donate R1 per member to the federation so that it could help the ANC in its 1999 election campaign.

Sasbo finance general-secretary Graeme Rowan told The Star that his union, with a 70,000 membership, would not deduct the money from its members.

“Our constitution precludes us from supporting any political organisation,” he said.

“Our members are drawn from different political organisations and we cannot therefore be seen to be aligning ourselves with any political party. We will not however stop individual members from donating to the fund.”

Cosatu spokesperson Nomethu Mpiti said the levy had been proposed by the central committee, made up of 500 delegates. “It is up to the membership to decide on whether the levy will be adopted,” she said.

“At the moment, Cosatu has not received an official response from Sasbo regarding the levy. We will hear from Sasbo and other unions this week.”

Mpiti said Sasbo members would have to take the decision about the levy and she hoped Sasbo leadership would allow its members to exercise their democratic right.

“We go to the executive committee meeting with an open mind, and our affiliates will be free to deliberate on the matter. The leadership will be guided by the delegates at the meeting and we hope to reach a decision that will satisfy everybody,” she said.

Land Bank’s restructuring gets stuck in the wage mire

RENEE GRAWITZKY

The restructuring of the state-owned Land Bank ran into further difficulty yesterday after a one-day wage strike by members of the traditionally conservative finance union, Sasbo.

The wage dispute coincided with staff resistance to the bank’s restructuring plans, aimed at broadening its range of services and client base and becoming more cost effective.

Such plans could result in re-structurings, staff transfers and changes in job titles and tasks.

Industry and union sources said the bank’s restructuring had taken on political overtones.

The wage dispute revolves around Sasbo’s demand for a 10% increase, while the bank has offered 6.5%. Members of the SA Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers Union did not participate in yesterday’s action.

Sasbo spokesman Ben Venter said the strike was about wages and not about the restructuring. He said the union’s demand was inline with settlements achieved with other major banks.

Venter said the staff learnt that the bank had budgeted for a 15% increase at the end of last year, but was now willing to offer only 6.5%.

Land Bank MD Helena Dolan said management wanted to restructure salaries to be market related and to introduce a performance-bonus scheme. This explained the 6.5% wage offer, a 2% increase in the housing allowance and a 6% performance bonus.

This package would cost the bank R17m, while the union’s demand would amount to R25m.

Dolan said there was a shortfall of R3m between the union’s demand and funds available.

Management, she said, had a long-term view on restructuring and staff development, and had allocated R7m to training.

Sasbo said there were plans to meet the bank next week to try to resolve the dispute, which had already been referred to the Commission for Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration.

Sparks expected to fly over suspension of Sasbo affiliation

RENEE GRAWITZKY

The suspension of Sasbo’s affiliation to the Congress of SA Trade Unions (Cosatu) until after the 1999 general elections was expected to spark heated debate at the union’s two-day national congress starting today, union sources said.

The election of Sasbo’s office bearers, instead of their appointment, was also likely to be hotly debated as internal divisions emerged ahead of the start of the congress, they said.

Internal divisions came to the fore during Cosatu’s central committee meeting in June, where the federation adopted a resolution that all affiliates contribute R1 each member to be used for activities linked to the general election.

The adoption of this resolution was used by Sasbo’s Durban branch to call for the union’s suspension from Cosatu until after the elections.

Sasbo’s membership base is traditionally conservative. However, insiders claim that left-wing elements are growing in influence.

Two govt groups offer different maize export figures

PAUL VECCHIATTO

SA MAIZE export numbers continue to be clouded by uncertainty with two government mandated organisations offering widely differing numbers.

For the financial year from April to August, the Perishable Products Exports Control Board, which has the responsibility to inspect shipments for export, has said that it has inspected 239 000 tons of maize, while the SA Grain Information Service has declared that 239 000 tons has been exported.

Grain information service maize information compiler Ferdi Jacobs said part of the discrepancy may be because not all maize earmarked for export had left the country yet.

The information service was formed out of the now-defunct maize board as a means of getting information about maize to the market. Its latest numbers go as far as August.

The Perishable Products Exports Control Board refuses to comment on their numbers as the organisation saw itself as an impartial inspectorate for export shipments.

Since January, the exports control board has inspected 739 699 tons of maize for export.

However, the industry operates on an annual cycle from May to April. The elevator operators, the companies which load maize onto ships at ports, say they have handled about 200 000 tons of maize since April.

Agrisport said that it had loaded 160 000 tons of maize, of which 25 000 tons was white maize, and Durban Bulk Shipping had handled about 16 000 tons white and 18 000 tons yellow. — I-NET-Bridge.
Strike threat at Nedcor

Employees of one of South Africa's major banking groups, Nedcor, have threatened to strike if the bank does not meet their unions' demands in pay negotiations.

Representatives of the SA Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo) and the Insurance and Banking Staff Association (Ibsa) confirmed that most members had voted yesterday to strike if the bank did not meet their demands.

However, Ashley Sutton-Pryce, the human resources director of Nedcor, said the ballots were "testing the water" and that the bank had not put its final offer on the table. There was no question of industrial action. Negotiations would continue on Monday.

He said he was quite sure that the unions' final offer was not on the table. The unions had "jumped the gun".

The unions could not be reached for comment late yesterday.

The unions objected to the bank's offers being linked to a risk element: a 24% growth in the bank's earnings per Nedcor Group share and a 28% increase in profits after tax for 1998.

Sasbo told its members yesterday that its final demand was for an 11.5% increase for lower-grade employees, an increase of 10.5% on guaranteed pay for higher grades and a two-week productivity bonus.

The bank's final offer was 4.5% on lower grades and 3.5% for higher grades, said Sasbo. In addition, the bank was prepared to make a further 2.5% available in July 1999 on the risk element.

The 2.5% would be back-dated to January 1, 1998, it said.

Ibsa said the bank had effectively split the increase due to its members. It said the bank had moved "the goal posts" by demanding that "future targets should be met".

Nedcor's attributable income rose 28% last year to R1.620 million. Earnings per share went up 24% and return on equity to 23.4%.
Nedcor signs wage deal with Sasbo, staff body

NEDCOR yesterday signed a 15-month wage agreement with Sasbo, the finance union and the Independent Banks' Staff Association amid some controversy surrounding a proposal that wage increases should be linked to company performance.

The agreement ensures that from next January, Nedcor employees will receive increases ranging from 8%-9%, depending on the job category, plus an additional 0.5% linked to promotions.

A further 2.5% increase will be granted for the three-month period from January to March 2000. The minimum wage will be R2,000 a month.

Sasbo said the unions opted for this instead of two other proposals which linked a portion of the wage increase to company performance. The unions were opposed to this "risk element" and subsequently ballot their members last week.

The unions believed this option was unfair as staff had no control over earnings a share or net profit after tax. In addition, it was the first time the company had introduced such a proposal into salary negotiations and had not raised its new approach in pre-negotiations meetings.

Sasbo's chief negotiator Carmen Hardy said the union might have considered this option if the "conditions for risk had been more positive".

African Bank will shed 200 jobs

Johannesburg — Close to 200 African Bank and Alternative Finance employees faced retrenchment by the middle of next month as the bank refocused its operations following the merger of the two institutions and the acquisition of African Bank by the Theta group, Sonya Fourie, a bank spokesman, said yesterday.

African Bank is restructuring to concentrate on the micro-lending sector.

Employees would be retrenched on a last in first out basis and given a severance package calculated on the statutory minimum of one week’s salary for every year of completed service.

However, negotiations were under way to accommodate the views of both the South African Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers’ Union (Saccawu) and representatives of non-unionised employees.

"Alternatives to be considered before proposing forced retrenchment of staff include calling for volunteers, considering alternative positions within the group, looking at ways to achieve the required structure without job losses and possible outside placement of staff," the bank said in a notice of termination of employment.

All non-core facilities and products will be contracted out.

Fourie said although big banks had up to now been reluctant to move into the micro-lending sector because of perceived high risks, they were starting to look more closely at this market.

The bank said its vision was to be the market leader in the provision of "select financial services to the under-banked market".

A number of strategies would be implemented to refocus the bank from "a small, unprofitable institution offering traditional financial products in a highly competitive environment into a profitable, medium-sized niche institution offering tested non-traditional savings and loan products ... I think we will be in a position to do it profitably," she said.

Strategies under consideration include restructuring the bank’s balance sheet by ring-fencing its assets and expanding its deposit base to create sufficient funding capacity.

Liberty awaits judgment on retrenchment dispute

RONNIE MORRIS

Cape Town — Liberty Life, the insurance titan, will now in February whether the Labour Court will order it to reinstate 23 employees who were retrenched when two divisions closed after automation.

The employees, all with six or more years' service, want the court to find that their retrenchments on June 3 1996 were not only unfair labour practice but invalid.

The court was told their woes started when Liberty Life decided to automate the functions in the New Business department and Marketing Technology Support Services (MTS) in Cape Town and Durban.

When automation was first explained to staff, assurances were given that Liberty Life did not retrench.

Towards the end of September 1995 the Individual Business division made a decision to close MTS and New Business.

The employees' woes started when Liberty Life embarked on plans for automation.

Present were Yves D'Halluin, a managing director, Gavin Cane, general manager of marketing, Gill Bogie, divisional manager of New Business, James Skuse, human resources manager, and Herschel Meyers, general manager.

A month later the decision was conveyed to a Liberty Life Management Committee (Mancom) meeting, attended by executive directors of the various divisions.

D'Halluin explained that about 300 jobs would become redundant during 1996.

It was noted that 65 percent of the jobs affected were occupied by "non-whites", and the fear was expressed that an announcement of their intentions might provoke "industrial action and possibly a strike".

When the court case started in April 1997 the applicants requested copies of the minutes of Mancom and board meetings for the period October 1 1995 to May 31 1996.

Liberty Life refused to comply and was subsequently ordered by the court to hand over the minutes. It refused and appealed against the order to the Labour Appeal Court, and thereafter brought review proceedings.

Eventually the applicants' lawyers inspected the relevant minutes and used them in the cross-examination of Andre Vermaak, the group human resources manager and Liberty Life's main witness.

Colin Kahanowitz, counsel for the applicants, told the court that Liberty Life had failed to call every single important witness who should have been called to testify on who made the decision to close the departments and why.

"The respondent's statement of defence proved to be an extremely malleable document. Some aspect of its defence was always changing as the insurance giant's trial progressed.

"True to its belief in the power of innovation, it regularly sought to discard old versions of the facts and innovate by introducing new versions," Kahanowitz said.
Saccawu lays charges against life bosses

BY ALUMPHAKI

Saccawu alleges that Liberty in writing and verbally made “fraudulent promises for alternative employment to its ex-employees”. To date no such employment was given and the ex-employees are struggling to make ends meet, with some already having their houses attached, claims Saccawu.

Another allegation is that Gordon and Andersen have offset the pension/provident funds of the retrenched workers against the balance owing to Liberty Life on their housing bonds.

The affidavit further mentions that Gordon and Andersen have taken unfair advantage of their ex-employees, most of whom are illiterate and ignorant of their rights.

It is further alleged that Gordon and Andersen knew full well that their ex-employees cannot afford justice and have been severely prejudiced due to lengthy and costly litigation and abuse.

The matter involving the former security personnel has been dragging on for some time now.

Their last day of service at Liberty was August 31, 1986, where they were promised, according to a memo in City Press’s possession, that among others, all their severance benefits in terms of the recognition agreement will be paid.

The ex-employees were further promised that apart from the payments, they will be offered alternative employment with the sub-contractor to whom their respective departments have been outsourced.

Attempts to obtain comment from Liberty Life drew a blank, but according to Saccawu co-ordinator Joseph Mosi, the company said they have no comment.
MANAGERS FURY OVER JOB LOSSES

EMBATTLED black managers at insurance giant Fedsure Holding's wholly-owned Fedsure-Medway are embroiled in a legal tussle with the company after their positions were made redundant in a recent restructuring exercise.

A senior regional manager, Mr. Nthlabole Shongwe, together with eight other managers have taken their employer to task for conduct that they say amounts to unfair treatment. In a letter to the Commission for Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration (CCMA), they say that they were not consulted on the restructuring of the company before their positions were cut.

Shongwe's management team is also expected to meet with the company to discuss the restructuring. The team's legal representatives were not available for comment yesterday.

The company's spokesman, Mr. Dave Jackson, was not available for comment yesterday despite many attempts to contact him.
We won’t axe 5 000 in city says Old Mutual

MD outlines cost cuts

THABO MARASO
STAFF REPORTER

Old Mutual managing director Gerhard van Niekerk has vehemently denied claims that the giant life assurer plans to cut head office staff by 5 000.

Mr Van Niekerk told the Cape Argus that Old Mutual was trying to reduce its total cost base by R500-million as part of a restructuring process called “Project 500”.

But the effect of the restructuring process on staff would be minimal.

“We do not expect massive retrenchments,” he said.

Areas that Mr Van Niekerk expected to be affected by the restructuring were the company’s British operation, its agency distribution business and the employee benefits arm.

He said such areas as the rapidly growing unit trust business were expected to open up employment opportunities for staff, who would be redirected from the restructured operations.

An unnamed source at South African Commercial, Catering and Allied Workers’ Union claimed earlier this week that Old Mutual planned to shed 5 000 employees as part of Project 500.

The unionist said most of the casualties from the restructuring would come from Old Mutual’s Cape Town head office.

Sascawu Western Cape secretary-general Crosby Bool yesterday denied the allegations had emanated from his organisation.

“It took us by surprise, we did not make that statement,” he said.

He said the union would investigate the source of the statement.

“What we know is that Old Mutual is in the process of restructuring certain business functions and we will make submissions with regards to that,” Mr Bool said.

“We don’t know anything about Old Mutual retrenching 5 000 employees,” said Mr Bool.

Sources within Old Mutual reported that news of the pending retrenchments had resulted in staff becoming “very nervous and apprehensive”.

Management had to spend most of yesterday reassuring staff that the reports were not true.

Equity act will affect women

The section that outlaws discrimination is a 'powerful tool', writes Colleen Lowe Morna

The unveiling on Women’s Day of the section of the Employment Equity Act that outlaws discrimination in the workplace, was, to quote Labour Minister Mmbatini Mhadiama, "another grinding stone, another powerful tool" in the struggle for gender equality.

Of the 14 forms of discrimination listed, four — gender, pregnancy, marital status and family responsibility — have a direct bearing on women.

The legislation both prohibits discrimination and obliges employers to present plans for positive measures that they intend to take to redress past imbalances. Diversity, as the minister emphasised at the launch, is not just a matter of human rights but also makes "good economic sense".

Where innovation, understanding customer needs, team work and consensus-based management are the name of the competitive game, hiring women is increasingly seen as good business. However, international experience also shows that legislation alone is not enough to right the wrongs of gender-based discrimination.

The majority of SA women are unemployed. They also live in the so-called informal sector, where women predominate on the bottom rung: the survivalist sector.

Of those who work the largest number are domestic workers — one of the most powerless and exploited category of labour.

While there are roughly equal numbers of men and women in the public sector, women predominate in the lowest paid categories. Only 10% of those in decision-making positions are women.

In the private sector this figure is even lower.

According to the Central Statistics Service’s Women and Men in SA, the earnings of white women average 60% of those of white men, while those of African women average 89% of African men. The average African women employees’ earnings are 43% those of white women and 28% of the white male employees.

Gender-based discrimination begins at home, where girls are encouraged to play with dolls, be humble and submissive, while boys experiment with mechanical toys and are taught to be ambitious, assertive and outward-looking.

That carries through to school, where boys are given first preference, and predominate in the scientific, mathematical and financial fields of study.

Much of the discrimination against women in the formal sector is hidden and difficult to prove in court. For example, job ads that emphasise travel and long periods away from home discourage women from applying because of their dual responsibilities.

Unfortunately, the Employment Equity Act does not begin to address one of the major structural causes of wage discrimination between men and women: the different weights which society assigns to the different types of work traditionally done by men and women. For example, a domestic worker responsible for raising children and managing a suburban home earns one-hundredth of her male boss’ management salary; hairdressers earn less than mechanics and so on.

Studies elsewhere have shown that state supported pre-school facilities are indispensable to women’s participation in the workforce. Yet only 1% of the education budget in SA goes to educate. Flex-time is virtually nonexistent.

The result is that women predominate in part-time and casual employment, where wages are lower and chances of promotion are slim.

The gender opinion survey carried out for the Commission on Gender Equality recently showed that 69% of women spent more than two hours a day doing housework, compared with only 22% of men.

While the majority of respondents agreed that women should go to work — with men citing economic reasons — only one third of respondents supported affirmative action for women.

The new legislation does not set any specific targets for achieving gender parity in the workplace.

In the SA social climate it will take more than just a powerful tool to bring about a powerful change. Massive public education, accompanied by media exposure of good and bad company practices, are called for.

Merger could result in 10,000 job losses

Cosatu worried about job losses after merger

THE Congress of SA Trade Unions (Cosatu) expressed concern yesterday that Nedcor's bid to take over Standard Bank Investment Corporation would lessen competition in the banking sector and affect jobs. Cosatu said it was worried about the affect on bank charges and interest rates and the effects extra running costs would have on job security.

It called on the Competition Board to investigate levels of job losses that would result from the planned merger and its impact on competition.

Cosatu said it was concerned to hear from its affiliate, the SA Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo), that the takeover threatened 10 000 jobs.

Cosatu said it supported Sasbo's call that discussions by the banks and unions be held before the merger is implemented.

The SA Chamber of Business (Sacob), on the other hand, said fears that a merger would lead to less competition in the banking sector were unfounded. Network Radio News reported. The trend in international retail banking was to merge and increase economies of scale, Sacob said. — Sapa.
Merger: Cosatu wants inquiry
Staff association backs Nedcor bid

Johannesburg – The Insurance and Banking Staff Association (Iansa), with between 5,000 and 6,000 members at Nedcor, as well as members at controlling company Old Mutual and other life offices, yesterday threw its weight behind Nedcor’s hostile takeover offer for Standard Bank Investment Corporation (Stanbic).

Stanbic, which is fending off Nedcor’s advances, last night said it would outline its “stand-alone” case tomorrow.

Iansa, calling itself “the independent financial union”, is predominantly a Nedcor staff association, market sources said. It has no known Stanbic members.

Iansa said in a statement that from the business case presented by Nedcor it was apparent the merger would create a “dynamic banking force” that could compete with international banks.

“Although this may initially lead to a reduction in staff numbers to effect economies of scale, in the long run it is bound to create job opportunities and scope for advancement,” it said, citing the example of Nedcor’s integration of Permanent Bank.

The bank rescue has fuelled emotive speculation in certain media and labour constituencies that the merger of Nedcor and Stanbic could cause 10,000 job losses. But the figure was only used by Nedcor in its synergy benefit assumptions and was largely predicated on natural staff attrition at the two banks.

Mike Leeming, an executive director of Nedcor, said last week: “We believe significant lay-offs are going to be avoidable because of a natural attrition rate of between 12 percent and 14 percent.”

It is a common tactic of advisers to companies in hostile takeover bids to lobby trade unions and staff associations in an attempt, clearly successful in this case, to enlist their support.

Iansa’s stance is at variance with that of the Johannesburg branch of the South African Society of Banking Officials (Sabo), the Cosatu-affiliated banking union, which last week adopted a resolution opposing Nedcor’s takeover of Stanbic, saying “the resultant job losses would not be in South Africa’s interests”.

The branch told Sabo nationally “to use its influence and power” to protect the jobs of Nedcor and Stanbic employees.

Iansa said it had the assurance of Nedcor executives that “staff turnover and the shortage of skills” would be used to take care of the majority of redundancies that may arise.
Sasbo condemns Nedcor’s tactics

RICHARD STOVIN-BRADFORD

Johannesburg - The South African Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo), the finance union, has slammed the handling of Nedcor’s bid for Standard Bank Investment Corporation (Sbic).

In a firmly worded letter from Sasbo to Mike Leeming, Nedcor’s chief operating officer, Graeme Rowan, Sasbo’s general secretary, said the union’s main concerns were its members’ job security, the urgent need to create rather than destroy jobs in South Africa, and the future welfare and stability of the finance industry.

“We have always had the greatest respect for Nedcor and the manner in which it has conducted its human relations, but the tactlessness of the past week has fuelled fears that Nedcor has regarded Sasbo as nothing more than an intellectual worker voice to be rubbed off with the scantest of information on an issue of major concern to the economy.”

But, despite Sasbo’s obvious ire, Rowan did not compromise Sasbo’s future impartiality. “We shall continue to allow both Nedcor and Sbic equal opportunity to air their views on the issue at any future meetings that may take place.”

Earlier this week the Insurance & Banking Staff Association (Ibsa), the self-proclaimed “independent financial unions,” supported Nedcor’s takeover bid but chose not to reveal its real role as Nedcor’s staff association.

Ibsa’s statement was further evidence that the Nedcor bid machine was upping its game on a broad front. It emerged this week that Leeming had told the remuneration manager at Nedcor Park in Siby, Johannesburg, to send out a memorandum advising staff of a voting line operated by Business Report’s sister paper.

It read: “The Star daily newspaper has opened a voting line for people to voice their opinions regarding the proposed merger. The voting pole (sic) closes this afternoon at 5pm.”

Rowan in particular objected to a letter from Nedcor which claimed labour had given its blessing to Nedcor’s bid: “Sasbo, the major player in finance sector trade unionism, has never been consulted for input. It is as if the bid has been conceived.”

“All that has occurred is that Nedcor has given our union prior notification - sometimes as little as 20 minutes - of management’s intentions.”

Union takes umbrage at Nedcor

Johannesburg - The strained relations between the South African Society of Banks Officials (Sasbo), the Cosatu affiliated finance union, and Nedcor over the latter’s hostile bid for Standard Bank Investment Corporation (Stanbic) took a knock yesterday, with Sasbo accusing the bank of trying to forge a “clumsy alliance” with union dissidents.

Sasbo said it had “noted with disdain” Nedcor’s consorting with a “disgraced president who has been suspended by his colleagues for indiscipline, abusive language and the use of foul language”.

Sasbo was at odds with George Selebi, its president, for claiming that an anti-merger stance was never taken at the annual general meeting of the union’s Johannesburg branch last week.

Selebi told Nedcor the meeting had instructed Graeme Rowan, the union’s general secretary, to do everything possible to save an estimated 10,000 jobs over three years that could result from the proposed merger.

“Although obviously wants to decoy Nedcor and Standard Bank employees from the real issues if the present Nedcor regime gains control,” Rowan said. “The resolution deploiring Nedcor’s acquisition was read to the meeting no less than four times and it was Selebi who supervised the voting process, there was not a single dissenting vote.”

He said Selebi needed to explain his departure from Cosatu’s position on mergers and job losses.

Selebi declined to comment.
Johannesburg - The South African Society of Bank Officials (Sasbo), the Cosatu-affiliated finance union that opposes Nedcor's hostile bid for Standard Bank Investment Corporation, received a pledge of support yesterday from the International Federation of Commercial Clerical Professional and Technical Employees (FIET).

FIET represents 10 million members in the finance industry in more than 400 trade unions from 135 countries.

Sasbo has estimated that more than 10,000 bank jobs could be lost over three years because of the proposed banking merger.

"FIET cannot accept a takeover that has such serious repercussions on staff and their families," Philip Jennings, the general secretary of FIET, said in a letter to Chris Liebenberg, the chairman of Nedcor.

"Our affiliate Sasbo has no option but to take whatever action is deemed necessary to protect employment. We support the Sasbo campaign."

Jennings said South Africa could ill afford such a devastating blow to job prospects.

"All possibilities should be explored to introduce a fair, comprehensive social contract that avoids these horrendous job losses," Jennings said.

Nedcor could not be reached for comment.
